I know my hand shook, but I don't think my voice did, though I thought of life being aweet, as I said to him,—

"I it very hard to die, captain?"

"Yes," he says, "I believe it is, to a strong man; and as God gave us life, and we've done our duly so far, why we must finish it by trying to save two more."

"But how ?" I says, getting hold of him.

"Don't leave the wheel," he says: and then again, "But it don't matter,—she makes no way. Lend a hand here."

And I helped him, and together, roasting almost, we dragged three great fowl-coops and a grating to the side, and he tied them together—lashed them, he called it—in no time; then we shoved them overboard; and as the vessel slowly swung round, we were out of sight o' the boats, which were about a quarter of a mile off. He had a rope to the coops so that they could not float off, and as he, told me, I slid down on to them and squarted there tremb, ing, while he lowered down to me the water-keg, some rope, the liacon, and two of the biscuit-bars. Then down to me the water-keg, some rope, the bacon, and two of the biscuit-bags. Then he pitched some loose pieces of wook-work and the cover of the cabin stairs and a huntch.

"That's right," he says, opening his knife with his teeth and cutting the rope, and their getting the tarpaulin and the bits of wood and things in the centre in the handiest way possible,—same as only a sailor could do. He tells me to hold on tight, and then lowering himself into the water he pushes off from the burning ship and begins swimming and guiding our bit of raft away very slowly, but still farther and farther off.

"Pli lash the coops and grating together," treat. You understand, do you?"

Prince wagged his head and tail, and gave his master a wonderful knowing look, and then the two stole quietly into the place.

Quietly this dumb detective glided around among the people, smelling away at the one's coat and that one's chain, until at last he set his teeth firmly into the coat-skirt of a genteel looking man, and could not be shaken off. The young man quietly made known the case to the by-

Then we both were silent, and watched the boats now farther away from us, and the blazing ship seemed to be the centre of a glorious ring of light, on the outside of which like sparks we all lay waiting for the end we all know was soon to come. Everything else was dark as pitch, not even a star to be seen, while the waves just rose and curled a little over as they washed against our raft; excepting the dull roar and crackle of the flames, everything was as still as death.

All at once I started, for the captain spoke sadly as he looked at his vessel; and out of the silence his voice sounded wild and strange, -

" If I'd had a crew like you, my man, I think we could have saved her ;" and then he spoke no more, for just then from being quite still the good ship seemed to roll a little towards us and then to the other side, slowly, and as if just bending to the breezel; and then we could almost see the water creeping up her burning sides as clouds of steam arose; and with one calm steady dip forward she seemed to plunge right down beneath the golden waters. Then there was a rising and falling of the sea. and a deep, dense darkness, out of which beart tearing sobs I ever heard from the the upper lakes, and was met at the wharf breast of man; and I did not speak, for I by a number of people, very few of whom, felt that it was the captain sorrowing for however—not more than half a dozen—were

They had no room for us in tow, and the weather keeping calin, we all rowed and worked in turns, steering according to the captain's direction for the nearest land; for when two others came out on the raft, and we tolled on for days, when one morn-there was a joyful cry,—

In another week I was back in the port I left, without money, but with as good and true a friend in Captain Ellis as ever walked. I had life, and with it came hope; and somehow, since then, things have prospered with me in the old country—the old home that I once left to go far at sea.

Very well," said the young man; "stay about here, Prince, till I come back;" and he joined the crowd within.

By-and-by the young man wished to refer to his watch when, behold! the chain had been snapped in two, and the considered the case a moment, and then a sudden thought flashed through his mind So, stepping out, he whispered the fact to the porter, and gained permission to take the dog in a minute or two.

ARRIVAL OF GUNBOATS .- Two of the gunboats recently sent out by the British government, the 'Cherub' and the 'Heron,' reached here during last night, and came to anchor off the city. This morning no little excitement was got up in consequence, and the docks were lined with groups of citizens anxious to get a sight of the welcome visi-tors. The Heron had all her flags up, and presented a gay appearance. During the morning the 'Cherub' came into Berry's permitted to go aboard. The flag ship, Britomart' met with an accident somewhere about Cornwall and had to be left behind to as the darkness, and then the captain was the first to break it in quite a cheerful voice,—

"Can you lay your hand on the rope?" he says; and I passed it to him, and then I could hear him in the Lark busily at work tying and fastening; and at last he says, "Now crawl on again; it will bear you better;" and faint and weary I managed to crawl on, and lay with my-legs in She will go on the ways here for repair.
