BY MRS. HENRY WOOD CHAPTER I. THE RUINED SURPLICE.

The sweet bells of Helstonleigh Cathedral were ringing out in the sum-mer's afternoon. Groups of people lined the streets, more than the customary usiness of the day would have brought forth; some pacing with idle steps, some halting to talk with one another, some ooking in silence towards a certain oint as far as the eye could reach; all waiting in expectation.

It was the first day of Helstonleigh

Bring your good young men, your promising lads, to the front in such a work, if clad in homespun; you can't write their future; and per-haps the majority of this audience form a comment on my text. The speaker here referred to the wonderful progress of the Hon. Sir H.E F. Young, who was the son of an African volunteer, afterwards Colonel Sir A. Young, forhis father's office, as protector of slaves in Demerara, to Governor of Australia zed by the Times of the date as an illustration of the fact that there is no royal road to learning. So it is in the Church. These are the agencies our dissenting friends around us are employing to entertainment and instruction of its hold their young and to build for them, must often have been apparent to the majority of this assembly that the prosperity of some few parishes and congregations does not rest wholly upon the popularity of the minister in charge, nor has minister in charge i success of mother church to all coming generations. And for one, we confess to rejoice as we see announced, from The Primeval Race Double-Sexed -a time to time, through our city press, curious essay, yet founded on some not a lecture before, or a discussion by, the Young Men's Association of St. Sepulences and significations—an elaborate and such a parish could not be otherwise than flourishing with such laymen as we could name here interested in all Church work at home and abroad, and aiding the incumbent in all he undertakes and proposes, and we are glad to say that such instances exist in this city and other parts of the Diocese. It is evident, then, that to secure a successful and the clergy of our generation—in a word, a step in the right direction which will be supposed. prosperous administration of our paro-chial work the lay, elements must be culti-lead us to settle the problem—What St. Nic. vated and employed, and to compass is the best means for retaining Sunday brilliant.
