BY MRS. HENRY WOOD. CHAPTER XVIV.

(CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.) He went back into his private room, carrying the dispatch with him, and there he sat down to think. From the very first he had not believed the fraud to lie with the post-office—for this rea-son: had the note been abstracted by one of its servarts, the letter would have been almost sure not to have reached its destination; it would have disappeared with the note. He had cast a doubt as to whether Arthur Channing had posted the letters himself. Arthur assured him that he had, and Mr. Galleway believed him; the information that the seal of the letter was unbroken was now a further confirmation that the letter had not been opened after it quit-ted the office. Mr. Galloway perfectly remembered fastening down the letter.
He put the bank-note in, wet the gum, and stuck it down. He probably would have sealed it then, but for the commo-

You and Yorke held a levee here, I suppose! That's the fact. You had so any chaps in here, gossiping, that you don't know who may have meddled with the letter; and when you were off to college, they stopped with Yorke."

"No, sir. For one thing, I did not take the organ that afternoon. I went as usual, but Mr. Williams was there imself, so I came back, I was only away about ten minutes." 'And how many did you find with "Yorke stepped out to speak to some-body just before I went to college," re-plied Arthur, obliged to aliude to it, but determined to say as little as possi-"Hamish was here; you met him coming in as you were going out, sir, and I got him to stay in the office till

I came back."
"Pretty doings!" retorted Mr. Gal-loway. Hindering the time of Mr. Hamish Channing that you and Yorke may kick up your heels! Nice trustworthy clerks, both of you!"
"I was obliged to go to college, sir," said Arthur in a tone of deprecation. "Was Yorke obliged to go out !"

"I was back again very shortly, I assure you, sir," said Arthur, passing by the remark. "And I did not quit the office again until you sent me to the post."

A young lawyer visiting Coboconk asked some of his friends to a game of cards in his room, to be followed by a little supper. Frogs were a new species of food in that latitude, and a dish of them crocked in the choicest way was the feature of the occasion. Supper time approached, and during a temporary full in the conversation, the door suddenly opened, and a Milesian waiter, in a loud voice, announced supper thus: "Mr E., them tude is done and supper is ready:"

"I was back again very shortly, I assure you, sir," said Arthur, passing by the remark. "And I did not quit the office again until you sent me to the post."

"Stop!" said Mr. Galloway; "let me clearly understand. As I went out, Hamish came in. Then, you say, Yorke and out; and you, to get to college. Is left Hamish because the post." left Hamish keeping office. Did any body else come in besides Hamish! "Not any one. When I returned

CANNINGTON.

CROPS-BOADS-WILD GEESE-SNOW-SIDEWALKS -- SCHOOLS -- BAND OF

Most of the farmers of Brock have Most of the farmers of breek have threshed their grain. They are all ap-parently well satisfied with the sample and yield, but very much dissatisfied with the low prices. Owing to the sharp competition among the purchasers the market at Cannington stands generally higher than is profitable to the buyers, being not unfrequently within a few cents of Toronto prices.

The roads leading to the village are in a very bad state just now. In some places they are almost impassable, being principally mud roads. Owing to the nature of the soil, the roads cannot be good till gravelled. The sooner the township council gives the matter due consideration, the better it will be for country and village.

Several flocks of wild geese, the pre-monitors of winter, passed toward the south during the last week. Our village was favoured on Monday with a light shower of "the beautiful snow." On Tuesday morning the roofs of the houses were covered.

The Corporation of Cannington have laid this fall sidewalks in many of the streets, for which they have the hearty thanks of the villagers, and particularly of the ladies. The sidewalk to the railway station was very much needed. It is hoped they will extend the walks on Cameron street to Mr. Edward's on the one side of the village, and to Mr. Baird's on the other. The overseer seems to have forgotten that it is necessary to cross sometimes from one side of the street to the other, for he has neglected to put crossings at the street corners. Every street having sidewalks should certainly have crossings.

During the last four months, I had the pleasure of several times visiting the public schools of the village. The lower division is kept in the town hall, under the management of Miss Fergu son; the higher division in the school house is under that of Mr. Marshall. Both schools are well organized, and ably conducted. The most improved method of teaching is adopted. village is highly favoured in having such efficient teachers. It would be well if the parents took more interest in the schools, and visit them occasionally. If this were done, both teachers and pupils would be much encouraged, and parents would be less hable to fault-findings. This duty of parents seems to be uni

A Band of Hope was organized in this village last May. It is in a flourishing state. The children seem to take great delight in it. It meets every two weeks in the school house. onions,-1st, Mrs. P. Crouter. Pota-
