Mr. Galloway recited the circumstancen of his loss. The detective sat near, his hands upon his knees, his head bent and his eyes cast upon the floor. He did not interrupt the story by a single word. When it was ended, he took up the crivolope, and examined it in equal silence; examined it with ridiculous minuteness, Mr. Gallowsy thought, for he poked, and puered, and touched it everywhere. He held it up to the light, he studied the post marks, he gazed at the seal through an odd-looking little glass that he took from his wantcoat MOST POPULAR SCIENTIFIC PAPER IN THE pocket, he particularly criticised the folds, he drew his fingers along its action he actually amount it all in allence. and with a countenance entirely impas-
