BY MES. HENRY WOOD.

C HAPTER XXIV. (CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.)

"We'll see which is strongest, I or Butterby."

When they were gathering together fer the reading, that night, Arthur took his place as usual. Mr. Channing looked at him sternly, and spoke sternly in the presence of them all. "Will your conscience allow you to join in this!"

How it stung him! Knowing himself innocent; seeing Hamish, the real culprit, basking there in their love and respect, as usual; the unmerited obloquy cast upon him was nearly too painful to bear. He did not answer; he was battling down his rebellious spirit; and the gentle voice of Mrs. Channing rose instead.

"James, there is all the more need" "James, there is all the more need self to the reading.

"My son, if thou come to serve the Lord, prepare thy soul for temptation. Set thy heart aright, and constantly endure and make not haste in time of rarely chosen, and perhaps for that rea-son, it fell upon Arthur with greater force. As he listened on, the words brought with them a healing balm; and grew trusting and peaceful as that of a little child.

cast upon you. Are you thinking this? But you must remember that it was not for himself that Arthur was so weighed for himself that Arthur was so weighed down. Had he possessed no conception how the note went, he would have met the charge very differently, bearing himself bravely, and flinging their suspicion to the winds. "You people cannot think me guilty," he might have said; "my whole previous hie is a refutation to the charge." He would have held up his head and heart cheerfully and henefully, waiting, and looking for the to the charge." He would have held up his head and heart cheerfully and hopefully, waiting, and looking for the time when elucidation should come.

No; his grief, his despondency, were felt for Hamish. There was the fester of the wound. If Arthur Channing had cherished faith in one living being more than in another, it was in his elder brother. He loved him with a lasting love, he revered him as few revere a were made the costs should be paid by the appellant.

MR. MEREDITH made some suggestations with regard to the Bill, but was very indistinctly heard. Among other things he was understood, however, to suggest that in cases in which a person whose name was on the voter's list of the appellant.

On motion of Mr. Bailey, seconded by Mr. Fitzgerald, a committee consisting of Messrs. Staples, Deacon, thought it should not be there, he should be at liberty to notify the clerk to strike love, he revered him as few revere a

VOTERS' LIST. In the legislature on Monday, Dec. 4, -Mr. HARDY moved for a return (CONTINUED FROM LAST WHEE.)

Mr. Gallowsy shook, his head; he knew that Hamish was in debt; he knew that Mr. Roland Yorke indulged in expensive habits whenever he got the opportunity, and he now deemed it likely that Arthur, between the two examples, might have been drawn in. "I shall not allow my doubts of him to go further than you," he said aloud. "And I shall put a summary stop to the law proceedings."

"How will you do that, now that they are publicly shared upon?" asked Mr. Channing.

"FR manage it," was the reply.

"We'll see which is strongest, I or Butterby."

When they was exharing together.

MR. Wood said that though the Bill was one supposed to be in the interests of the public, it had been perverted so as to be employed merely for party purposes. It had struck him as reasonable that when a person entered an appeal against a voter, and when after an investigation the vote turned out to be perfectly good, the party appealing should pay the cost. Voters, whose votes were perfectly good, were brought to court, and their private affairs dragged before the public, simply to gratify the whim or the spite of political opponents. There were many cases where men of straw were set up to conduct appeals, and after setting the whole machinery of the law in motion against large numbers of voters, scarce-law analyses attack of He thought A MORNING CALL.

You may possibly be blaming Arthur Channing for meeting this trouble in so sad a spirit. Were such an accusation cast unjustly upon you, you would throw it impatiently off, and stand up to yourself and your innocence in the broad light of day, Even were you debarred, as he was, from speaking out the whole truth, you would never be cast down to that desponding depth, and thereby give a coloring to the doubt cast upon you. Are you thinking this?

Whole machinery of the law in motion against large numbers of voters, scarcely a name was struck off. He thought that in these cases the parties making the appeals should pay the costs. If the result of the appeals was that person's names were wrongly entered on the roll they, or, if the fault was his, the assessor should pay the costs. He hoped the Government would consider an am endment which would settle definitely the question as to who should bear the expense.

Mr. Sexton gave an instance that in the township of Appeals was that person's names were wrongly entered on the roll they, or, if the fault was his, the assessor should pay the costs. Mr. Sexton gave an instance that in the township of Ancastor, in which men of straw entered appeals simply to gratify a whim, the result being that not a name was struck off.

Mr. Deroche said in his opinion the assessor was very often to blame for names being wrongly entered on the list. He was in favor of compelling these officials to pay the costs in such cases. Where unsuccessful appeals

A melancholy accident happened of Watt, of the township of Harcourt. He was in the act of disengaging a twig from the tumbling shaft of a threshing machine, when his coat sleeve was caught in the coupling, and he was whirled underneath the shaft before the machine could be stopped. One arm was crushed to pieces, the other broken and both legs were broken, one of them in two places. Dr. Bowe, of Haliburton, was immediately sent for, but little hopes are entertained of his patient's
