It appears that the nice discernment of the Bench was put to a severe test at the last Division Court held at Thornbury. Mr. Maston, by profession a fisherman, owned a large boat. Having lost his painter (a rope used to tie a boat) he improvised a hay rope leaving what was left in the boat. Mr. Joseph Murdy's hungry cow coming to the water's edge to quench her thirst was delighted also to find an edible rope, and immediately commenced at the end of the line fast to the wharf, hinally stepping into the boat to finish the leavings. Intent on the threat, she was unmindful of the unmoored boat's drifting out into the lake, when, inding herself half a mile or so from shore, and being unable to navigate her vessel, she decided on a swim for life. In this, however, she did not succeed, whereupon Murdy snes Maston for the loss of the boat.
