THE CHANNINGS.

might have been able to give a different account.
The master made no comment then, He motioned Tom to his desk, and gave the word for prayer. As the boys were rising from their knees, Hamish Channing entered the school, attended by Mr. Ketch.
Hamish approached the master, who shook hands with him. Ketch remained, staring and glistening with sweat, at the door, shaking his head and his teeth reversely at the boys. If looks could blow up a room, the college school had certainly gone aloft then.
"I hear you have not found the boy?" said the master to Hamish. "It is very singular."
"We have not found Mr. Pyc," continued Hamish gravely. "I came to know of your country an immediate investigation into the doings of the college here last evening. That the disappearance of Charles is in some manner connected with it, we cannot do otherwise than think. I have been to Ketch, with me that he may tell his tale." Ketch was marshalled forward and ordered to tell his tale, and the master of the school, with a stern look, told him in a distinct way enough, but he could not forbear enlarging upon his small disappointments over the trifles and trivialities, and it sent the school into convulsions. In the midst of it Tom Channing breathed freely. Ketch's preaching was complete, and the boys were impressed as he had feared might be, though having been forced to listen to it to the master's bidding, he was not displeased to have visited upon any of the boys, resumed Hamish.
"I should, indeed, be a favor-er, if you will not permit me to say that I should be glad to see you

any of the boys, resumed Hamish.

"I had more to do with planning the trick than Pyc had, sir, so it is only just that I should be the scapegoat." We lived upon Pyc's persuasion that he had become his own master, and a flagrant one not much to my liking, added Hamish, impatiently.
"I was very anxious to see you, Mr. Pyc," demanded the angry master.
"In a great measure I was, etc. If I do go to the college, I will not be I let them suffer for it. Little Channing had offended me, and I wished to serve him out. But I never thought of this."
In the perplexity of deciding what he ought to do, when official proceedings were interrupted by the entrance of way, the master hesitated. What he would have done was uncertain. Flogged free from the school, and sent to his parents, but at that moment there occurred another interruption, and a more serious one.
"Diggs, the man who lived at the boathouse, had entered the school, and was asking to speak to the best master." The best master, who had been called to the school, was asked to attend to him. He was to be performed, he waited for no permission, but went forward at once, a college cap in his hand, and his red coat, with a white waistcoat, and white trousers, and a white necktie, and a white cravat, and a white waistcoat,
