This summer revives many oldtime fabrics, and chief among these is a barege, a soft thin material long since set aside for grenadine. These dresses are very pretty and inexpensive. Some of the prettiest styles now made up are of a creamy white, plain and striped with white. It is necessary to make bareges over a lining, such as Silesia, which looks like silk, or over an old skirt, because the material is too fragile to hang self-supported, especially as the trimmings add to its weight.
