White's was the heavy, half-hearted interance of a man who is evidently acting a part in which he feels ill at course.

Of the line of argument adopted by Mr. White it is unnecessary to say much. He began by assatting the postition assumed by Mr. Cartwright in his is thingset speech, or rather the postition which he would like to make it appear Mr. Cartwright assumed, for either willing a more of the latter a meaning they will not bear.
