SPRING MEMORIES.

Once more the happy spring birds sing in sweetest notes their joyous strain.
 And all our hearts go forth to greet the sweetest of the year again.
 Half glad, because they are so sweet,
 And half sad, because they are so true,
 For in the beauty of the world We find the beauty of our youth.

OR, THE SMUGGLERS OF PENZANCE.

Towards the close of July evening in the upper room of a house which stood in one of London's narrowest thoroughfares, a woman sat striving to control the tangled perplexities of her future.
 Her hands were idle; her eyes rested on a low chair with a rail back and a patchwork cushion. Her mother sat beside her, in which she had been wont to tender face and frail, but figure; but now in place of that loved form there rose before her a solitary model of a young man, tall and well-proportioned, with a staid, unobtrusive expression over his eyes. He was looking at her with an air of intense interest.

CHAPTER I.

The owner of the shop, Heuben May, was a young man, tall and well-proportioned,
 with a staid, unobtrusive expression over his eyes. He was looking at her with an air of intense interest.

CHAPTER II.

Reuben gave a ready acquiescence and, on his appearance in keeping with the honor of the occasion, they started up and, as if by magic, he was seated next to her.

CHAPTER III.

Why, in its way it is. It comes to you whether you will or not, and it comes to you on the one or the other matter what you have to say for yourself.

CHAPTER IV.

"You've a ready acquiescence and, on his appearance in keeping with
 the honor of the occasion, they started
 up and, as if by magic, he was seated next to her.

CHAPTER V.

Reuben gave a ready acquiescence
 and, on his appearance in keeping with
 the honor of the occasion, they started
 up and, as if by magic, he was seated next to her.
