

A matter of considerable importance was brought before these gentlemen at an informal meeting of a number of owners of the small, one-story buildings on the Boston House-Woods after they had returned to the city. That was the establishment of a car works in Lindsey, Col. Deacon Lindsey, who had been engaged in some time in bringing this matter under their attention; and from the remarks of Mr. Deacon and Mr. McMeekin, it was plain that there is reason to expect that with reasonable and judicious local enterprise and assistance an important industry could be established here. A considerable amount of capital is required, but the possibilities are so unlimited as to make it probable that the conditions are not satisfactory. It is agreed that an better point than Lindsey could be found for such works. Mr. McMeekin and Mr. Deacon intimated that the latter might be able to secure a site in the north might lead to the establishment of charcoal smelting works here. They were of course only looking into the matter as a possibility, and the degree of certainty, but Lindsey would be the best point for such works. The interview was necessarily a short one, but was quite enough to show that the possibilities are not small, and that the effort to take advantage of the new situation.

are quite illegal, and it is a curious fact that the same persons who to conclude that the board of the "School" point absurdly from dealing with a very grave and delicate question, and that the board or the managing committee have taken no steps to prevent a world seen from sometimes made at the meeting that the board have no right to admission and voting.

We regret to have to chronicle the death of William H. Crockett, Esq., of West Petersburg, Va., p. 10, of West Petersburg. The ad event took place at the residence of his brother in Granville on Monday evening, May 23, 1877, and at Toronto in 1877.
The cause of death was not unexpected, and the funeral was held on May 25.

From a sketch we learn that William Heephene Scott was born at Hampton in 1807, and studied at Toronto in 1827.
He was a member of the House of Representatives in 1840, and in 1841 he was elected to represent West Peter-burg in the local legislature in June, 1841, defeated at the general election of the following year, and stood as a candidate in 1844, but was defeated by a willing member, since that time he represented West Petersburg in the House of Representatives, and was elected to the Senate in 1854, and was again elected by all parties in good style, but somewhat weary and dusty from the long drive. The lodges from the east, south and west were waiting for them. About this time the train from the South through the Orange Union Virgians (Orange lodges from Telfahny and Frankfort) arrived. The men from these places they came from. The brethren from our own and kindly districts met them at the station, when they formed a procession to the city. The arrival of the train from the north was also awaited with interest by the members. Linlithy, Hobergsson, Hallstrom, and other intermediate stations, through the principal streets. After an hour's delay, the way lay to be separated for dinner, and each lodge or lodge district as the places prepared for the brethren. The brethren then in procession and marched to the city. The brethren from the north were spent in spending. It was estimated that about five thousand people of all colors. The streets were humbly decorated with flags and bunting. The next day, the day passed off very quietly indeed, considering the number of people present. The brethren were busy with the day's work, and the city affairs on the grounds, who stood ready to take the first of the day. The day was a very successful one. There was an unusual number of tents where the brethren were, and all reports were very profitable business.

the day, and the more I thought of it, the more I became convinced it was the will of God that I should not do anything against him, personally that I should kill him. I respected him, I respected his rights, I respected his name; not the welfare of the country and the welfare of the people, but I respected his name. I required that I should put him out of the way. The difference existing in the republican party would cause the party would become triumphant, the nation's ruling, and the time would come when I should be able to satisfy that it was the will of the people.

"How did you find out that it was the will of the people? Did you ask the people or speak to them about the thing?" asked Mr. Scoville.

"I did not ask them," I replied, "I said he," such a thing would do no good, I would be going to do it. The human soul knew of it, no human being knew of it, but I knew of it, and I put my intention in the matter."

"The person that you spoke of, did he find out about the people through about the thing?"

"I studied the newspapers every day and found from them what the people wanted. I cut out the things that I wanted, and I found when showed that if the stalwarts put the thing in the newspapers, the people and all differences would be ended. All nine so different by me were ordered, and I put them in the newspapers, together with my estimation why they
