roof is constructed in the now popular style, termed double angle or hip roof, and is suffmontated by a bell tower, in which Mr. Thomson intends to have a bell hung,

From the floor of the following shows in 1881. Township, the barn to the top of the roof is 49 ft. high. As will be seen the capacity is something chormous and carries the imagination away to the vast buildings owned by those farm kings of western Dikots. Mr. Thomson stor of in this barn crop suf-fleight to keep a steam thresher at work six days. In the western and of this barn is the stable in which your reporter found five beautiful teams doing ample justice to their stomachs over their outs and hay. The stable and sucroundings are a model of neatness, everything so beautifully planned and laid out in such a way as certain-ly must make it a pleasure rather than a tack to attend to the various duties of farm life. At the eastern end, running north and south, is the cow stable, 100 ft. long, capable of holding thirty head of cattle. Then there is the store room and the chop-ment and driving-house and open shed, barn, thence east 30ft., then e south 100ft. reader will perceive that this proposed i building on the west end will run parallel with the cattle house on the east end of the liege barn, thereby forming a square indeed. Mr. Thomson is intending to erect water. Now for the hay been. This building is separated from the others by the lane and is specially for the storing of hay. The size is 60 kild it and about eighty tome of hay can be stored therein. Here also is another fine stable, more fine horses. and fine stone work. Both the barns have t snways a few feet from the roofs inside, running the entire les gib of each barn. This is for the running of the hay forks. one in each barn. Mr. Thomson uses the patent rack litter this season to enable him to unload a large load of hay in five minprepared to submit immediately upon the lifes, the rack and hay being lifted clear of the wagon, swung up to the roof, whirled along on the transvave, the rack after opening and dropping the hay in the mow returns on the tramway, is replaced on the waggen in a twinkle, and away the boys hurry places is in keeping with everything to be seen around the places. This rackiff inglay-tem is bound to come into gonreal favor. Let us look at Mr. Thomson's residence, which at our present writing is in an unfinished state, but will be completed in good time.
