Many ludierous incidents occur in this land of extreme necessity at times. Lately one of our hotels advertised for an experienced waiter. An Englisman, fresh from the downs of Suffolk, who had never handled a dish nor been inside of a dining-room lest to dine, applied. Within a couple of days it was evident he knew nothing of his business. The landlord represented bim for his fraud, when he innocently re-plied that the had been for several days waiting for a job, and certainly he must be considered an experienced whiter." He was paid and discharged, but the waiter had his board and $2 the better of his land-

This individual wast ravelling from Hrandon to Hapid City by stage. The roads were in an awful condition, and although the stage was heavily laden with passingers creey time they came to a much hole, that apparently had no bottom, and the stage was all the team were able to pull through, all the passengers and driver with one accord left the stage excepting this wonderful lord of the occasion, who was immorable and calmir and pemponely held the fort while the common herd were frequently obliged to lift stage, riding ford and team out of the mire. Yethe imperiously held the threne, It must be borne in mind that troutles civilization has little regard or respect for such plans barons, so on a fitting occasion, when near a doop mire hole, the teamster winked at those afoot and by one destrous movement of his team dumped the mushroom baron into the mud hole. The scene was richly enjoyed by all except the subject of the plot, and he vowed all manner of retribu ion on reaching their destinations, but nonled off and where connects prepalled. Mr. Wm. Ar. Angus Carmichael, till lately merioned of l'annington, serived in the city a fact and a time a special attendes a symmer, and so much benefit did he correct tom his terp that he has eveld to serile permanently somewhere in a serie permanently somewhere in a serie permanently somewhere in a serie permanently important position. It is somewhere in the series of the series then the finale, "slatinfiering regardless of cost." Another cause is the rapid multiplying of points of sale along the whole line of rationar for hundreds of miles the only place where the immigrant could not his outfit before penetrating the great unknown continent. His oxen and his waggen, his horses, his buckboard, his food, his clothing, his entire kit must be bought at Wissiper if he had not brought these with him now, fact as the railway is pushed towards the "Rockies" business centres apring up along the line, and every afficie almost is on sale there at Windipeg prices, and the purchaser very naturally postpones his purchases till he gets as near as possible to his new home, so of necessity as possible to his new home, so of necessity trade in the great gate city must suffer from inland competition, and the inland towns from other upeters still further inland. Three and four hundred miles west of Winnipeg waggons are offered by some agents for less than the same waggon is sold for at the tactory is Ontario, and rather than loss a sale, it will be given "on time." To the purchaser this may be good forfune, but to the manufacturer and the seller it is not. But one of the most potent factors in this mutter is the late land-boom crase out there. Merchants would take money from their business to buy lots hoping to sell again at a large buy lots hoping to sell again at a large advance, and some succeeded. But some have the land still on hand and cannot sell. Their money is locked up and they cannot meet their bills with what is unavailable meet their bills with what is unavalable and failure seems to some new inevitable. Some of these are able, honest men, and therefore entitled to much sympathy, but this soothing commodify cannot meet their present distress. These facts are given not to deary the country as a field for mercantile enterprise, much less is it insunated that the Northwest will disappoint the east as regards its future greatness, but it is meant to give warking to intending mer-chants to look carefully shead ere they invest their thousands in store-keeping in

THE BRIGHT SIDE. But there is a bright side to this subject and it should be given, too, in these notes. There is a good feature that business is chiefly conducted on a cash basis. Very little credit is asked, or if asked would be given. Purchasers are usually strangers to the merchant, and why should he trust the unknown. Then the new comer has money with him for the most pari, and his purchases are proportioned to his purse. Then the homestead law keeps a steady restraint upon too lax crediting. A man's land cannot be attached for debt until after he gets his patent, and to get his patent it takes three years in the case of homesteading. Then as to his stock, and implements; and household effects the law protects him from seizure for debt to the extent of some six or seven hundred dollars, estimating the articles at their present value out there. For example, theexemption from seizure includes older towns there.
