aire looked straight ahead. She went quickly along. Her feet and a felt light, almost void of sense. had to do with this, and she was ly frightened. For the first time in close chance of physical insult.
Sicoumb justified her dread. He had no more regard for common laws of restraint than the majority of untamed brutes, when conscious, as in his case, of firm thews and active bulk. As for moral bravery, his nature harbored no concern with such nicer clements. The only vices he did not possess were those for which he had never known an hour of temptation. His father had drank himself to death, and he inherited what was perhaps an embryo taste in the same direction. He got drunk once a fortnight now, in his twenty-seventh year, whereas, two years ago these diversions had been much rarer; in a decade, underhismneon trolled conditions, there was a fair chance of his becoming to speak more generally, the vast social momentum of heredity, which seems to be so plainly understood and so ill appreciated in our golden century, had Slocumb well in its stern grip. There were no outward incident forces as the philosophic phrase goes, to make his case in any way a hopeful one. He had seen Claire; he had exchanged a word with her: he had liked her. If his liking was put in the baldest form of explanation it would have to deal with rather darksome realisms. And it is always preferable that the pursuant atyr and the unwilling nymph be treatpoint of view

Claire would not speak. She was very frightened, as before has been recorded: she seemed to see, between the gloomy interspaces of the lamps, a phantasmal semblance of her father, looking untold rebuke at her, and then vanishing only to reappear. She walked on with fleet energy. An idea shot through her mind that she might call a policeman to rid her of this incubus. But she dismised the idea at once. It was too savagely desperate even for the confronting dilemma.

By this time Slocumb had begun to see that Claire was proof against all his known methods of conquest. But she was unprotected, and he had a dogged dislike of giving up the siege. The silence continued for nearly five blocks. Daring this time his eyes had scarcely once left her face, gleaming distinct or tim as the lamplight waxed or waned. "Say!" he at length re-addressed her. 'Ain't ye hungry?' I was thinkin' a stew would go putty good, just now, or a dish o'ice-cream. P'r'aps ye'd rather tackle sumpn sweet. Hey?"

She made no answer. He pecred closer into her face, and repeated the last odious little interrogative monosyllable a good many times. But Claire remained as mute and irresponsive as though it had fallen on stone-deaf cars.

This lure suddenly held out to appetite was his last persuasive stroke. It expressed in the most exhaustive terms just how narrow and barren his concention was of Claire's reasons for shunning and as it were. She had now only him. He stood as the hideous result of the along in a northerly direction | a hideous phase of society; and he could I she reasoned the point at which a no more divine or imagine higher and richer levels of life than if to know of She was not sure at just what these had meant to be familiar with the soil and climate of a remote star.

He was disappointed and chagrined, but not angry. Anger could not consort with his present state; another kind of heat already filled his veins; one flush kept the other aloof. He had now decided that Claire was not to be conciliated, and yet the perfect lawlessness of his past made him in a manner unable to snap the bond of attraction and leave her. Self-control was a scaled book to him; he had not even opened its cover, apart from learning its rudiment

When they had gone five or six blocks further, and the street at which Claire would take the cross-town car was by no means far away; he abruptly caught her arm and drew it close to his side. yould be somehow more | so holding it with an exertion of purely cream, dev would hold their | unscular strenth, beside which her own and the work aday world resistance counted for little more than the flutter of a bird.

Even at this most trying juncture she still moved on. He continued to walk. as well. She veered her face toward his, however, forced out of all her preof resolved to vious pitiful disdain, and he saw that she had grown pale as death. "Let me go," she said. "Don't dare band which was I to hold me like this!" "Lock here!" be returned, his tone taking a nasal whispes and his breat combine process header sweeping so close to her nostrils that sh caught in it a stale taint, as of lique drank some time ago. "I wouldn it as ain started, with slightly | harm a hair o' your head ; you can just pice, the mexterminable bet on that, I've took a likin' to you an' I'll treat ye good. If you wus a lad livin' up t' Fifth Avenyer, ye wouldn'

git more respectfuller behaved to m "If you don't let me go," said Claire gasping a little as she got out the words 't'll complain to the first policeman w

He dropped her arm at once, stoppin short. "D' ye mean it?" he asked with great show of reproach. "Say

d' ye mean it?" But Claire hurried on. She had a wild momentary hope that she had hit at random upon a blessed source of deliverance. Here, however, she had quite miscalculated. Sloenmb's ontburst had merely formed a bit of the cheap sentimentality which one of his race and stamp would select as the lame makeshift in a forlorn cause. It chanced that when Claire reached the desired corner a car was opportunely passing. She signaled to it; the driver saw her; it stopped, and she entered it. Meanwhile Sloeumb had kept at her side, though with the distance between then materially widened. She paid no heed to the question of whether or not he entered with her. The car war entirely empty as she took her seat. A little later she slipped a five-cent piece into the small glass repository for passengers' fares-that touching proof of the confidence reposed in drivers by those who employ them. Shortly afterward she saw Slocumb standing on the outer platform. Her heart and courage almost failed her, then. He presently walked inside the car, and paid his fare, as she had done. She expected him to sit down and resume his persecutions, but he did neither. He went out again and stood on the platform.

ELDON AGRICULTURAL SO-CIETY.

Annual Mostins The annual meeting of Eldon agriculture al society took place on Thursday, January 10th. The usual business of the meeting was proceeded with and the auditors report submitted and adopted. The following officers were nominated and elected for the ensuing year: —P. McSweyn, president; A. Rodgers, vice-president; G. W. Millar, secretary; J. C. Gilchrist, treasurer; H. Wetter, J. J. Fee, W. D. McCrimmon, Thomas Resr, Wm. McKee, Wm. Cameron, Wm. Ashman, Wm. McEachern, directors; A. Hewitt on his resigning the office of secretary and treasurer, which he has held for several years. Mr. Edward Lanagan was appointed in his place.

VERULAM AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Annual Meeting. The annual meeting of the Verulam agricultural society was held in the town hall on Thursday, 17th inst., the president in the chair. The meeting was not so large as it should have been, but this was in some measure account for by the the blockade of the roads. Those who were present. however, were enthusiastic workers, who entertain great hopes that the society will have an unusually successful year. A great number of orders for seeds have been filed with the secretary, and this insteelf promises to be a good feature in the year's programme. The election of officers resulted as follows:—President, Mr. Alex. Robertson; vice-president, Mr. John Junkin, reelected; directors, J. T. Robinson, W. D. Ventress, Thos. Robinson, Wm. Thurston, James Gallagher, John Braden, Richard Lawson, Geo. R. Calvert and Jas. Lithgow; W. B. Read and I. Junkin were re-elected anditors. In their choice of officers, the society has made an admirable selection. There was some difficulty in persuading Mr. J. I. Read to again assume the duties of sec-treasurer, but fortunately for the society, Mr. Read gave way and accepted the office. The duties are by no means light and require business capacity, executive ability and knowledge of farming. Mr. Read makes an excellent officer, and being one of the leading high-class farmers of the district, naturally takes a deep interest in anything pertaining to agriculture. It would indeed be much to the general advantage if more of the farmers took as much interest in their occupation, and attended the meetings of the society, which afford so good an opportunity for the inter-change of ideas and experience. Frequent meetings might be held during the winter, and the affairs of the farm discussed. It might even be well to have an occasional evening, not too formal, something of a free-and-easy character, at which smokers could take a little tobacco, and the evening made entertaining as well as useful. There are great nossibilities in agricultural societies, and Verulam might yet astonish the province by developing some of those dormant possibilities. - [Independent.

BROCK AGRICULTURAL SOCI-

Annual Meeting at Derryville. The annual meeting of the Brock agricultural society took place at Derryville on Thursday last. The attendance was quite cumerous, but was composed largely of Sunderland and Cannington people, there being but a few farmers present from the mmediate vicinity of Derryville. This is to be regretted, for the farmers are the nes who should manifest a deep interest in the welfare of the society and should especially attend the annual meetings. On motion the chair was taken by Mr. Wm.

ANNUAL REPORT. The secretary then read the annual report, which shewed the financial standing of the society to be much better that	it is

been for some years past:
Members' subscriptions	S204 :
Admission fees to exhibition	162
Government grant,	88 8
Donations	219
Municipal grant
Total receipts for the year

A noticeable and pleasant feature in the report was an item of $25 refunded to Mr. Wm. Shier, president of the society, which had been awarded to him at the last exhibition as a sweepstake on a herd of thoroughbred durhams.
The report was adopted, and members subacriptions paid for the new year.

OFFICERS ELECTED. The following officers were then duly elected: Wm. Shier, president; Malcolm McPhaden, vice-president; directors, John Edwards, John Hill, Joseph Ruddy, Samuel Pangman, Wm. Griffith, Thos. Reid, T. H. Glendinning, R. C. Brandon, Silas Wallace; auditors, Neil McPhasen, David Ir-
