Bishop Jamot and Vicar General Laurent arrived in town Monday evening and proceeded to St. Mary's, where a very large congregation had assembled, the church being crowded to its full capacity. Bishop Jamot gave a short discourse in the course of which he he introduced the new priest to the people. He spoke very highly of the vicar-general's ability, and of his many excellent qualifies as a priest, at the same time pointing out the duries of the congregation in aiding and supporting their priest in his work. Very important duties would fall upon any priest taking charge of the parish of Lindsay, and he spoke their cordial support and co-operation for Father Laurent. Father Laurent in a few words expressed the duties of a parish so large and important as Lindsay, more especially when he contemplated the work which had been done here by the lamented Father Stafford. He admitted his inability to fill the void caused by the could in the cause of education and temperance, two matters which were dear to Father Stafford, and he felt therefore that he was not altogether a stranger to the people and the work here. He asked from them their currest prayers that his weakness should be supplemented by the divine spirit.
