Smith, both of whom were members of Lord Salisbury's cabinet, is confirmed. The quarrel originated in a speech made by Mr. Smith, in which he spoke in favor of Mr. Gladstone's scheme for buying out the landlords of Ireland, and urged a fair sunport of the proposal. This provoked Lord Churchill beyond self-restraint. He declared the conservatives would remain perpetually out of power and be condemned to pearance. She looks pale and thin, and everlasting opposition if such a policy as though her indisposition is spoken of as Mr. Smith's should prevail in the organization. He described the policy as one of "pottering poltroons." Lord Salisbury being absent Viscount Cranbrook has assumed the task of of attempting to effect a reconcilliation between the two leaders.

He appeared to be much agitated and elbowed his way to the edge of the assemblage. When the royal turn out reached a point epposite this he threw something into the carriage. Great excitement followed the strange man's action, and he was quickly taken into custody by the police and hurried from the scene. It was subsequently learned that the article was not an explosive, as had been feared by many, but only a piece of paper. When the queen noticed her assailant's approach she shrank back from him into the carriage. Her majesty was evidently somewhat startled.
