At Nobottle, a suburb of Northsmpton, England, a farm laborer of the name of Simuel Faulkner shot a servant girl, of whom he was jealous, and then blew out his own brains, dying immediately. There had been no quarrel, though Faulknerhad told the girl recently that she should never have Judge, a young man to whom she was engaged. The girl sustained terrible injuries, and is in a critical condition. The gun with which Faulkner shot the girl he borrowed from her sweetheart.

orrowed from her aweetheart. -William J. Blew died at the county hospital, Chicago, last Wednesday of fright occasioned by mock initiatory ceremonies on his entrance to a local court of Foresters. He was a compositor on the Chicago Times and expressed such fear of the ordeat that the men in the office for the sake of a joke told the chief rangers, and when he applied at the court he was put through a series of unusual and swful ceremonies which the physicians think shocked his mind and caused his death. There is to in a coroner's inquest. - Letters received from her majesty's ship Raleigh, on the west coast of Africa station, contain particulars of a gallant rescue from drowning of two officers of the up in plaster of paris. It appears that was too has a and prevented the circulation of blood, so that instead of uniting it began to decay, an it had to be amputated. Still not being properly done, it was taken off again about one and a half inches above the clow.

In his cable review of the political sit ustion in England during the past week. Justin McCarthy says: Mr. Gladstone seems to me to be in excellent condition for the work he has to undertake in the coming week. He seems "very fit," as the phrase here goes, and has been answering questions in the house of cemmons for the last day or two in a voice much stronger. questions in the house of commons for the last day or two in a voice much stronger and clearer than some weeks ago. He has a great task before him, but he must feel convinced that he will win in the end and before long, if only the the strain on his before long, if only the the strain on his physical resources and nerves do not prove-tee strong for a man of his age to bear. Heanwhile things are going well for him and for us. Already there is a great nat-ional resetion against the Chamberlain and Hartington doctrine. The decision of the National Liberal Federation on Wed-landay was an event of the uncertiment. the National Liberal Federation on Wednesday was an event of the utmost importance. The National Liberal Federation is the grand caucus of Great Britain. It threw over Chamberlain by an overwhelming majority, and emphatically declared for Gladstone. Men who were there tell me they never saw such ascene of enthusiasm and passion. Mr. Illingworth, the member for Bradford, a colleague of the late Mr. Forster, denounced those who desert Gladstone, and in the course of his speech used the word "traitor," which was taken by the meeting to apply to Chamspeech used the word "traitor," which was taken by the meeting to apply to Chamberlain, and the outburst of cheering was starting and tremendous. I am told that Chamberlain was furious at the rejection.

sure to last a long time—two or three weeks perhaps. Mr. Gladstone is quietly preparing for a dissolution if it should prove secessary, and arrangements are being made at this moment for such a course. It is commonly said here that if the second reading is carried by a not very great ma-jority Gladstone will declare himself content for the present with the fact that the principle of home rule is affirmed, and withdraw the bill now to bring it on again tter let it be rejected by J. Ne the house of lords, and go to the country for home rule and against the lords. The country is quite ready for the fight, but a country is quite ready for the fight, but a postponement of any sort would discourage the people and perhaps make them fear the government had not actually set their hearts on carrying home rule at once. Besides, we want Gladstone himself to lead the struggle, and Gladstone is very old and his time with us cannot be long. No doubt Chamber ain could be squared and is anxious to be squared. His friends have been saying this all along, but the difficulty is that a compromise which have been saying this ail along, but the difficulty is that a compromise which would please Chamberlain might not quite satisfy Mr. Parnell. Gladstone and Moriey will not stand by any measure not acceptable to Parnell and the Irish people. Now, as before, Parnell holds on behalf of the Irish negation.
