-The Belleville Ontario offers the following account of how "Cotlin" Macdonald obtained his peculiar and ghastly title:-"In 1878 a farmer named McIntyre from Murray was shot fatally by Lulu Ellis, an inmate of a notorious brawl known as 'The Farm,' in the northern outskirts of the ciry. The body was taken to the Hastings house, where a coroner's inquest was held. Mac donald appeared on the scene and made himself more officious than the coroner. When McIntyre's father came to the city factorald went with him to buy a coffin. Macdonald went with him to buy a comn. The old man only had $16; the coffin cost $21. Macdonald persuaded McIntyre to give him the $16, and he would advance the balance. When Macdonald was arrested it was found that he had spent freely of the money at the bar, but McIntyre got $10 of it back, and with his dead son left for home. He did not prosecute Macdonald, and so he was discharged. Hence it was that reporters gave him the name of that reporters gave him the name of 'Coffin' Macdonald, who, as Chief Justice Cameron said, should lead an honest life if only for the name he hore."

Northwestern Railway between Barrie and Hamilton, was arrested at Barrie on Friday on a charge of robbing the mails. He pleaded guilty and was committed for trial.

John McGregor, of Wolfe island, was found Wednesday by his brother lying at the foot of the stairs in his residence naked in a pool of blood, breathing heavily and unconscious. His left eye was badly injured and swelled. There was a cut above the left eye, and a bruise on the head. About the body were several marks of injury. He usually slept up stairs in the house, and a number of bloody spots were seen on the floor near the bed. It is supposed that he was the victim of an attack by robbers, or that he had fallen down stairs. The evidence showed that the affair had occurred on Monday night last. ed for a term of years; in either case possession may be had after harvest.
