The reason why the Irish question is so troublesome, obtrustve and provoking is because it involves the social order of that country, and it is the nature. der of that country, and it is the nature of local questions to push their claims for precedence over others,

-The well informed London correspon ent of the Montreal Star cables: "There is the beginning of a very important, I may may vital, change in the political situation to-day. In the first place the Round Table conference has taken a turn more favorable than the most sanguine politicians on eith-er side could have imagined. Mr. Chamberiain is so impressed with the prospects of liberal reunion that he has abstained from all support of the government in the rather cruical divisions of the closure which are going on. More than this, there is very good ground for the statement that a home rule bill by Lord Salisbury and accepted by all parties is a contingency by no means impossible. Such a measure is not likely to see the light this year, but next year something like an agreement of parties, which took place upon the question of redistribution of seats, may be Salisbury's change of front. If it is, the change largely results from the pressure of the Unioniets, who feel that Ireland is virtually in a state of anarchy. Mr. Chamberisin has long felt this. What is more important Lord Hartington is beginning to feel it. The Whig leader long ago laid down four conditions under which home rule was certain to come one day. Lord Salisbury will be
