INDSAY, FRIDAY, JAN. 6, 1888. LOCAL MATTERS.

A DECISION IMPORTANT TO MUNICIPALITIES.

|By His Honor Judge Dean.| Edwardsv Townships of Ops and Fenelon. On 24th August last the plaintiff was driving along the town line between Ops and Fencion, a few rods west of the Fene. ion road, when owing to a defect in the bridge across a small creek at that point his buyes was broken and he was himself ti rown out and somewhat badly bruised. H now brings this action against the two to anships for the damage sustained from

"Every public road, street, bridge and them, and highway shall be kept in repair by the corporation, and on default of the corporation. It is tru so to keep it in repair, the corporation shall, besides being subject to any punishment provided by a s, be civilly responsible for all damages sustained by any person by reason of such default, but the action must be brought within three months after the damages have been sustained." Section 4si enacts that "All township boundary lines not assured by the cover because he was also in fault. So in Nicholla v. Great Western railway, reason of such default, but the action must be brought within three months after the damages have been sustained." Section and an attendant to watch it and keep the gate shut when trains were approaching,

This makes it the duty of the two municipatries to maintain this road in a proper state of rep ir, and makes them jointly liable if they nave been guilty of default, O'Corner v. O onabee and Douro, 35 W. C.

It is not pretended that this bridge was no, had'y out of repair; one log had rotted ay and was gone, the one next to it had br ken in the middle and had failen down, leaving the sade sitted up; it was entirely un sic and dangerous to pass at night, and it was only a matter of good fortune that horses crossing it in daylight did not come

It is contended, however, for the defendants, that the road was little used on account of some had hills upon it, and that it was in a sufficiently good state for the amount of revel that went over it. Lereve over it yesterday from the Feneion road o a point west of the bridge, which has been repaired since the accident. The road ise f, when you enter it from the fenelon road and for some distance beyond the bridge, is nicely built up and grave-led, and would lead a stranger who might be driving upon it to suppose thathe wasentering upon a good road, at d upless he noticed son ching wrong with the bridge he would naturally drive over to at a quick pace. It is hardly necessary to remark that a bridge such as I have described is not such a bridge as a traveler would expect upon such a road, or one such as the corporation should maintain.

I can hardly think of a municipality, un-less it be a very remove and thinly settled one, which could justify a bridge being for one, which could justify a bridge being for a long time in such a state of disrepair. The fact that there may not be much travel along a road does not justify the corporation in maintaining it in a state which makes travelling upon it dengerous to life or property. It may be that the volume of travel upon this read may not justify the cutting doen of the hills spoken of, but once that the road is opened the corporations are bound to see that the bridges are at least safe. These populous and wealthy townships caunot shelter themselves under a plea that might be valid for a new township with only a scattered and poor population, "The road that will do because it must do, and is the only road that can be given in a new country, will not answer in must do, and is the only road that can be given in a new country, will not answer in an older and he ter settled place; and the road that will do them may not be sufficient in a wealthier and more travelled section."

O'Connor v. O onable anta.

It was contended that the townships had no notice of the defect in the bridge; the evidence was that it had been in a bad state for more than a year. "Notice may be interred from the notoriety of the defect and from its continuance for such a longth of time as to laid to the proposalities. that the proper officer of the municipality did in fact know, or with proparaigliance or core might have known the fiet. This latter is sufficient, because this digretally ware and objicance they are hound to indivise, and therefore, if in point of fact they do not know of such defect, when by erdinary and due vigilance they would have known it, they must be responsible, as if they had actual notice." (See cases collected in Haginson's Manual, p. 486.)

But there is no necessity to infer notice in this case; the pathmaster knew that the bridge needed repair, and notice to him as their officer is notice to the corporation. He directed statute labor to be put upon it; he did not examine the work after it was done to see if it was properly done, as was his duty.

On the whole I can hardly imagine a case where a corporation could be more clearly guilty of negligence, and the only remaining question is whether there was contributary negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

The test as to whether there was contributory negligence or not is well laid down in Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. Rep. N. S., 585, and in Walton v. The Lendon, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co., H. and R., 424, in these words. The question is:— "Whether the damage was occasioned entirely by the negligence or improper conduct of the defendant, or whether the plaintiff himself so far contributed to the misfortune by his own negligence or want of ordinary and common care and caution, that, but for such negligence or want of ordinary care and caution on his part, the misfortune would not have happened."

want of ordinary care and caution on his part, the misfortune would not have happened."

Apply this question to the case before us. The plaintiff was not taken by surprise; if he had been driving along and came suddenly upon the hole it might have been too late for him to stop before he noticed it, or in the sudden emergency he might not take in the extent of the danger, but here he had crossed it from the other side with some difficulty, and gone into a farm yard through a gate only some twenty yards beyond the bridge. He was there told that the bridge was in a dangerous state and that he must be careful; as he came out of the gate the opening in the bridge was in plain view, and he says it looked much worse from that side than it had done from the other side. It is not in evidence whether he opened the gate on the wayout or some one did it for him, but he either got into or remained in the buggy and drove onto the bridge, when the horse, refusing to cross the hole and backing up, he struck it with the whip; the horse leaped the hole and when the forward wheels struck the log on the opposite side the mischief was done; it was a young, high-spirited horse.

Now, what would a man who exercises.

Now, what would a man who exercises ordinary and common care and caution do under such circumstances? Pretty much all he knew about the horse was that it was young and high-spirited but gentle in ordinary circumstances. It is true it had crossed the same place an hour before, but the opening did not look nearly so serious from that side; he had been warned of the danger, his mind was full, or ought to have been, of the question as to how he was to cross that bad place in the bridge; at starting he was not more than three or four times the length of his horse and buggy from the dangerous spot. Would not ordinary and common care and caution have suggested to him to take the horse by the suggested to him to take the horse by the head and lead him over?

Or another way of escape was open to him. It was perfectly safe to drive through the creek at the north end of the bridge, though not very much used there were several wagon tracks there. He says he did not see them. I think it very likely he did not, but a man exercising ordinary and common care and caution would have seen them, for he would have tried to find some other way out before he would have attempted to drive across that bridge. He is not to blame for striking the horse when he began to back, for he might have thrown he began to back, for he might have thrown them off the side of the bridge, but he is to blame for risking the chance of a young animal refusing to cross the dangerous coercion and I will end this despatch by looking chasm when there was no necessity of running the risk. I should come to the conclusion that from his contributing negligence the plaintiff has disentified himself to recover even in the absence of express authority, but there is abundance of authority; in Castor v. Corporation of Uxbridge, 39 W. C. R. 113, a lot of role were already and the strength of the government; but among liberal unionists who have no seats to lose there is a growing feeling of shame poration of Uxbridge, 39 W. C. R. 113, a lot of poles were strung along the highway preparatory to the erection of a telegraph line; two men riding in a sulkey had passed several of them; as they continued to drive on they both looked over into a neighboring field at some object, when the horse shied the sulkey struck one of the poles and was the sulkey struck one of the poles and was the accident. Besides the duty which at common law would be imposed upon the municipal corporation to maintain the roads in repair the statute puts it upon the corporatio with the co-relative liability. Section 491 of the municipal act is as follows:

"Every public road, street, bridge and demands."

It is true that the accident could not have happened but for the misconduct of the township, yet the plaintiff could not re-cover because he was also in fault.

dail enacts that "All township boundary lines not assumed by the county council shall be opened, maintained and improved by the township council except where it is necessary to eract or maintain bridges over fivera forming are crossing boundary lines between two municipanties."

This makes it the duty of the two muniheld guilty of contributory negligence and could not succeed in his action. It is true that if the railway company had done their duty and put up the fence and gate and left an attendant the accident could not have happened, but on the other hand if the plaintiff had not contributed by his want of ordinary and common care and caution to the circumstances it could not have happened.

This doctrine of contributory negligence, which is a most salutary one, is little understood by the public. It may be laid down for one's practical guidance as follows: No matter how much the other party may be to blame, yet if the party injured has not exercised ordinary and common care and caution in trying to escape the misfortune he cannot maintain an action against the wrong-doer.

wrong.doer. The judgment will be for the defendants. not because they are right, but because the plaintiff is wrong, and in such a case I can give neither party costs. Judgment for defendants withou costs.
