LINDSAY, FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 1888. A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

WIFE MURDER AND LYNCHING IN COLORADO. The Murderer and Victim former residents of Cannington.

A Drunken Husband and an Ill-treated

Wife-The Tragedy at Last-The Lynching Party's Quick Work. The sudden death of Mrs. T. H. Howe. daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. Vandewark of Cannington, was recorded in THE POST. It was not known at the time that she had been brutally murdered by her husband in a fit of drunken passion and under such brutal circumstances that a mob of enraged people soon gathered and lynched the miserable wretch. The following details are from the Fort Collins (Colorado) Courier of April 5th:

Fort Collins was shaken from centre to circumference about one o'clock Wednesday afternoon of Apri! 4th by the report that James H. Howe had in a moment of drunken frenzy cut his wife's throat and killed her. News of the heart-rending affair spread like wildfire, and in an almost incredibly short space of time the whole town was aroused and the most intense excitement prevailed. Business for the entire afternoon following the tragic affair was almost entirely suspended, and groups of men, women and children could be seen in all parts of town discussing in bated breath the details of the crime that had startled and shocked them with its suddenness and unprovoked brutality. A little before one o'clock, p.m., on Wednesday, April 4, James H. Howe, a well-known citizen of this place,

CUT HIS WIFE'S THROAT with a pecket-knife. The knife blade pierced the jugular vein and she bled to death in a very short time. Howe struck his wife first on the right side of the face with the knife, inflicting a cruel but not fatal wound. Mrs. Howe was on her hands and knees on the ground in front of the house, and Mr. Howe was upon her back, with his right arm about her waist. After stabbing his wife the last time Howe got up and went into the house and lay down upon a bed, where he was found when taken into custody. Mrs. Howe struggled the her feet, bleeding profusely, and cried "Murder!" in a smothered voice. She then walked to the gate, passed out to the sidewalk and started for Lindenst., less than half a block away. On reaching the corner of the fence enclosing the lot on which the house she lived in stood she stopped and tried to catch hold of the corner post but failed, and reeling fell to the ground, face downward, and soon expired. Gus Evans, who happened to be driving past the house at the time, saw the conflict at the front door and immediately gave the alarm. A very high wind was blowing at the time, and his cries could not be heard very far, but people passing along Lindenst. Observed his motions and mistrusted that something was wrong. Wm. Nolan, S. H. passed the stone house on Walnut at, occupied by Mr. F. J. Schroder I have decreasing in she voice of a wanna. "Marden," was cried out. It was all I heard that I could understand. When I came in front of Howe's house I saw through the screen door, Mr. and Mrs. Howe scuffling. They came near the door and shoved the screen door open in their scuffling. When the door opened Mrs. Howe feil out and I saw her on her hands and knees and Mr. Howe upon her back, with his right arm around her waist. He held a knife in his left hand about one foot from her face. Then Howe atruck her with the knife on the left side of her face underneath the jaw. There was no blood visible upon the laft side of her face before the blow was struck, but there was blood upon the right side. Blood issued from the wound made by the blow on the left side of the face in a stream that looked as large as two fingers. The flow of blood was constant. After cutting her Howe gave her a push with his knees and she fell out of the doorway upon the ground. She rolled out and partly over and catching herself got up. On rising to her feet she halloed "Murder," and threw her hands up to her face. She then straightened up and walked to the gate, which she caught hold of and held on to for a moment. Then ahe went weatward along Linden-at, stopping at the corner of the fence. The distance from the house to the gate I should judge to be about ten or twelve feet, and from the gate to the corner of the fence. She clung to the fence corner and seemed to turn half way round and then fall upon her face. It could not have been longer than three or four minutes from the time I her face. It could not have been longer than three or four minutes from the time I saw the scuffling in the doorway until she fell. I called to Mr. Nolan and he and sevfell. I called to Mr. Nolan and he and several others came there. I then went over to the store on College avenue and when I returned Mrs. Howe had been carried into the house. After tumbling Mrs. Howe out of doors Mr. Howe went back into the house. That was all I saw of him. The corner's jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against James Howe.

THE WIFE MURDERER LYNCHED. At intervals all the long afternoon there were hundreds of hurried, whispered consultations, by groups of determined men, and it was evident to the most casual men, and it was evident to the most casual observer, that an organization was being perfected for a terrible purpose. What that purpose was the sequel will show:

Precisely at eight o'clock in the evening the electric light wires were cut and the lights disappeared. Then bands of men, some of them masked, gathered in different parts of the city, and took up a line of march in the direction of the jail. Not a word was spoken. The different bands arrived at the jail aimost simultaneously and after placing the sheriff and his aides under guard, began a vigorous assault upon the main entrance to the jail building, through which an entrance was soon effected. Then guard, began a vigorous assault upon the main entrance to the jail building, through which ac entrance was soon effected. Then came the hugh iron door which separates the living rooms from the jail corroidor. This offered some resistance, but with cold chisel and hammer the lock bolts were cut, the door yielded and they gained entrance to the corribor. The cage door was not locked but the door to the cell in which Howe was confined was closed and heavily bolted. The cold chisel and hammer were again brought into requisition and within fifteen minutes from the time the infurlated crowd arrived at the jail the sought for victim was in their grasp. Shrinking and terrified with fear and crying piteously for mercy, the miserable wretch was rushed into the open air and hurried to a derrick which stands at the south end of the new court house, not more than 200 feet from the jail. The derrick had been used in lowering large blocks of flagging stone into the basement, where they will be used in the floor of the new jail. A rope with noose attached had already been placed in position and under this Howe, still begging for mercy, was led. After the rope had been adjusted about his neck an opportunity mercy, was led. After the rope had been adjusted about his neck an opportunity was offered the doomed man to speak, but beyond saving that he had a brother and sister in Kansas City, and begging in God's name not to hang him, he said nothing. His pleadings for life were responded to by derisive shouts. The signal was given. A score of men gave a lurch on the rope which had been led over the top of the derrick, and the wife murderer's budy shot up into the night like a rocket. His arms and feet were bound with strong cords. His struggles were of short duration. After death ensued the crowd dispersed in a

THE MURDERSR AND HIS VICTIM.

James Henry Howe, whose terrible crime and tragic death have been the subjects of so much conversation during the past twenty-four hours and Eva Schuyler, his victim, was born and raised in Fredonia. N.Y. Both came of most excellent families and were reared with care. Howe's father is dead, but his mother is living. Mrs. Howe's father died several years ago, and her mother re-married Oliver Vandewark, father of E. E. Vandewark, and brother of Martin Vandewark, of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Howe were married when she was fifteen years old. He was nearly forty years of age at the time of his death and she something over thirty. They came to Fost Collins in the winter or spring of 1880 where they have resided since with the exception of a few months time that they lived in Eston while in Ex. Gov. Eaton's employ. He was a mill-wright and one of the most skilled mechanics in the west. He had employment nearly all the time at high wages. He was somewhat addicted to the immoderate use of liquor when he came here, and the habit N.Y. Both came of most excellent fami.

OBITUARY.—In my last letter I informed you that Mr. Neil McFadden and Mrs. Mintern were very ill and that their friends entertained but slight hopes of their recovery. Time has proved that the fears of their friends were well founded. On Saturday evening about half past ten o'clock Mr. McFadden breathed his last. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon. Service was held in the Congregational church, after which the mourning friends proceeded to the Scotch burying ground, where the remains of the deceased were deposited in their last resting place..... Mrs. Mintern in hopes that a change might prove beneficial, had been removed to the residence of her father, Mr. Charles Sproule of Cannington. But the hope was vain. She passed from this world about two o'clock on Sunday. The funeral took place on Tuesday and was FAREWELL OYSTER SUPPER.—On Wednesday evening, April 7th, a large number of the gentlemen friends of Mr John Kelly assembled in Mr. Jenkine's large dining hall, where a fine spread had been prepared by the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins. It being the eve of Mr. Kelly's departure for Lindsay the citizens of Little Britain took this way of showing their esteem and regard for one who had se long been a citizen with them. Before the good things were dispensed with, hewever, a complimentary address was read, to which Mr. Kelly made a feeling and suitable reply. After tea toasts were proposed by the chairman and vice-chairman, which were responded to most heartily by the different parties called on. Mr. Robert Harding gave a song entitled "Rock the cradle, John," which took the house by storm, All joined in wishing Mr. Kelly and his bride every success and much domestic happiness in his new place of residence.
