FARM AND FIRESIDE.

The Stable Cure.

I was not a little startled the other day meeting on the street in the best of health apparently an old acquaintance whom I had supposed to be filling a conimptive's grave long ere this. The last time that I heard of him was about a rear ago, and then he had been given up by the doctors as a hopeless case. I conoratulated him on his recovery, but I must confess that my liveliest emotion in recard to him was one of curiosity. In nswer to my enquiries he told me that when the medical men had exhausted their resources he determined to put in practice a plan of his own. Accordingly he journeyed by easy stages to the Blue Mountain region of Virginia, where he established himself in a farm house and bought a horse. He spent the whole day in the open air, taking care of the steed himself, and riding him about the reighborhood. At first, he told me his weakness was such that he could not stay in the saddle more than fifteen or twenty minutes at a time, and he had to pull up very soon if the horse broke into a trot.

Accordingly a farmer named Frederick Stevens, living near Campbelliord, took a dose of Paris green, and while Mrs. Stevens ran to a neighbor's for aid he took a second dose, in all over an ounce. Not content with this second dose, he took a mixture of laudanum and ether, that had been got for a sick beast. Vomitting was produced and relieved him somewhat, but he refused to have a physician and none was procured until four o'clock on Sunday afternoon. At present he is improving, but it is difficult to say what the result will be, as the stomach is in a high state of fever. He now disclaims all knowledge of taking the poison.

Last Thursday forenoon two young men very soon if the horse broke into a trot. very day, however, he became a little tronger, and in a couple of months he was able to ride ten or twenty miles on a stretch with very little fatigue. He atributed his recovery in part to the fact hat he not only rode but groomed his herse, and busied himself an hour or two in the stable every day. In this opinion, he confirmed what I remember hearing an old physician say years and years ago, tamely, that a "horse barn," as he called i, is one of the healthtest places in the orld. For those who love horses the stable cure would be such a pleasant one that a physician who prescribed it might be sure that his directions would be folowed to the letter .- [Boston Post.

of the barrels until you get turned around and ready to start back. You take two ows at once, of course. The wheels hould be twice as far apart as the distance hetween two rows, say usually about six feet. The men can ride. Mr. Ellis first thought one man could tend oth sprinklers, one in each hand; but Moon found better work could be done with one man or boy to each. A farmer ould get up such an arrangement as this or about 80, and if water is plenty and handy by, it may not be worth his while to look for anything better. The action of the cart will keep the green well mixed in the the water, but it will take a good deal Water. Several inventors have got up praying machines lately. President Ohmer, the well-known horticulturist, tays the Nixon is best. It is drawn by a horse, holds 90 gallons of fluid, has a force pump that sends the water out in a spray like a fog, drenching 20 feet wide at a passage. These are the claims; I have not seen it at work. Of course, this the perfect way of applying poison rater. It does just the same work my little hand apraying machine used to, but seven times as fast.

Bugging Potatoes.—T. B. Teny, uccessful Ohio farmer who has made potatoes a specialty, became distatisfied several years since with the paris green treatment for beetles and returned to land-picking, He felt that some injusy was done to the present. was done to the vines by the poison, although he could not exactly prove it, -160-th.

and suggests in the New York Tribene that here is a fit subject for experiment station work. As for the hand-picking, that is not such a tedious operation as many farmers think, if it is done in the right way. The important point, says Mr. Terry, is to begin just as soon as plants enough are up so one can follow the rows and keep the beetles constantly picked as clean as possible for two or three weeks. This prevents their laying many eggs; thus but little trouble will be had with the lavvae. We pick in quart cups, each picker taking two rows. Have a large tin pail (6 gallons) with tight cover at the end of field, to put beetles in. We do not try to get them all, but walk along and get what are in plain sight, the object being to get as many as possible in a given time. Time can be saved by taking advantage of their habits. Every warm day they will fly from fields where potatoes were grown the preceding year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year and light on the outside rows of the year.

potatoes were grown the preceding year and light on the outside rows of the new piece. We go over such rows or the new days several times, and sometimes hardly let them go into the rest of the field at all. They only fly for a few days. Some larvae always hatch. To keep them from going to seed, as well as from eating the potato vines, we gather them into pans, each person taking two rows at once and using a paddle, made of a soft-wood barrel stave, about four inches or five in width. The pans are common eight-quart milkpans with handles of light wood nailed to them, of such a length, that the person, tall or short, can stand up straight at his work, and still have the pans right under the vines. At the end of the rows the larvae are emptied into the pail. With the work thus systematized, we do not find hand-picking a serious matter. We have twice kept 24 acres very clean in this way. The amount of work was probably not half what some would think.

MIDLAND DISTRICT NOTES.

—The veterinary surgeons sent to Tara, Ont., by the Dominion and Ontario governments report that the disease afflicting cattle in that neighborhood is not pleuropneumonia, but an affliction of the blood due to local causes.

-Ross McDonald was arrested at Belle-—Rosa McDonald was arrested at Belleville the other day on a charge of bigamy. She has two husbands, it is alleged, living there at present. One of them, husband No. 1, is a one-legged man named Z:mmerman, whom she married over a year ago. The day after the wedding Rosa deserted him, and nine months ago married Steve Philips, No. 2. She is only 20 years of age, and was, a year or two ago, engaged as a school teacher in Dundas county. She denies the first marriage, and alleges that Zimmerman made her intoxicated before the nuptical knot was tied.

The nuptial knot was tied.

Rev. Mr. Taylor, Methodist minister at Foxboro, swallowed a teaspoonful of iodine in mistake for a blood purifier he had received from his physician. Mr. Taylor has been auffering from an acute pain in his left chest, and the iodine had been given him for outward application, and was treble the ordinary strength. The bottles containing the iodine and the other remedy were similar in size and shape and stood together. Dr. Falkiner relieved him of the dose immediate after it was swallowed, but secondary inflammation of the bowels is feared, and the case is considered critical.

-Last Thursday forenoon two young men were seen by Father Bergin to enter the R.C. church at Newmarket. Thinking the matter suspicious, the rev. gentleman entered the church and found everything right and the young men apparently saying their prayers. Before leaving church the priest spoke to one of them. The man said his name was Begley, and he was on his way to Kingston from Philadelphia, remarking that he was rather out of his way to here. The other young man was begreater marking that he was rather out of his way up here. The other young man, who gave his name as McGrath, said he was here visiting a relation named Wallace, and that Begley was with him. They remained some time longer in the church, and when they left, on examination it was found the poor-box had been broken open and rifled.

H. Ellis. A cart was made, using wheels from some farm tool. Two oil barrels were fastened to standing on end. Two inches from the lower end of each, on the front side, a hole was bored. Short tin tubes were inted to these holes, driven through and tarne, up around inside and nailed down watertight. Four or five feet of rubber hose was slipped on to each tin, and a rose, such as is found on garden sprinklers, put on the other end. Put in the water and green, having covers to keep it from slepping out. Hitch a quiet horse between the hills and have one man to each sprinkler. Broke the Camera. "I wish to be taken in this attitude!" The voice was that of the leading trage-dian of far famed "Uncle Tom's Cabin" combination. He sat upon a cushioned divan in front of a camera in a photograph gallery, with one soiled but richly jeweled hand sup-porting his brow, from beneath which his eyes gazed with an intensely tragic gleam at the framed motto, "Terms Cash," hanging on the wall, and his face settled into an expression of lurid gloom that would have made the hair of a cast iron statue stand on end. The moment approached for the exposure of the plate, and the ticking of the photogra-pher's watch, which he held in his hand, was the only sound that broke the sepulchral silence as the gloom on the face of the eminent histrionic artist deepened into a tragic intensity absolutely thrilling in its awful majesty. "Ready. Now." In slow, measured tones the operator spoke. With one hand he swiftly removed the black velvet cloth that had covered the black veives cloth that had covered the instrument, and the sensitive plate, prepared in the mysterious recesses of the dark room, was exposed. For one brief, inappreciable interval only was it thus exposed, and then a terrible crash shook the building, while amid a storm of flying fragments of wood, glass and metal could be seen the outline of a warn sitting on a cushseen the outline of a man sitting on a cual-ioned divan, gazing at the wall with a far away, majestic look of unruffled dramatic been analyzed, the samples being collected trom dealers in all sections of the Dominion. The impurities found were principally alum and lime, both unwholesome. The alum is used in place of cream of tartar because of its low cost. The lime, both tartrate and sulphate being found, was present from the use of improperly refined cream of tartar.

The analysts found and reported the Royal Baking Powder to be pure, free from lime, alum and phosphatic acid, and of high leavening strength. A complete analysis would undoubtedly have shown no baking powder except the Royal entirely free from some one of these objectionable ingredients. This, we presume, accounts for the lack of leavening power in the other powders, as sometimes complained of by the cook, and for the bitter taste found in the blacuits so frequently complained of by ourselves.

But aside from the inferiority of the work done by these powders, the physicians assure us that lime and alum taken into the system are injurious. Their physiological effects are indigestion, dyspepsis or worse evils.

The question naturally arises, why do these cheap baking powder makers use these things? Alum is three cents a pound, lime still cheaper, while cream of tartar coats thirty-five or forty. The reasons for the chemical purity of the Royal Baking Powder were recently given in the New York Times, in an interesting description of a new method for refining argols, or crude cream of tartar. It seems that it is only under this process that cream of tartar can be freed from the lime natural to it and rendered chemically pure; that the patents and plant for this cost the Royal Baking Powder Company about half a million dollars, and that they maintain exclusive control of the rights.

This official recognition of the purity and value of the Royal Baking Powder is now used, to the exclusion of all others, by the United States government, its advertisements for supplies calling for it by name, as the continued tests of the official chemists show it to be much higher in strength an
