The Canadian Lost.

LINDSAY, FRIDAY, NOV. 2 1888.

By FRANK HOWARD HOWE and LAS-CELLES CHESTER MAXWELL.

I read Fred's letter from The Eclectic

while Garbould examined the check (for a good round sum it was, too), at first doubtfully, then critically, but at last approvingly. He was forced to admit that Fred had written something which, for some reason or other, had found favor in the eyes of one of the greatest literary authorities in the country. Carbould is a critic, and it goes without saying that he is a skeptic and a cynic at the same time. Of course, he admitted nothing openly, but I thought I could see a gradually dawning respect for Raeburne in his tone and manner as the conversation progressed. The old fellow is intolerant to the conundrum there. I looked at Kitty. a degree, and only listens to other people's She was gazing demurely out of the win-opinions upon compulsion. But this atnoon he showed unusual forbearance. for him, not contradicting us more than once in three minutes. So that when the two got up to go off together I detained Fred long enough to whisper. "if I was not convinced of your good fortune by the evidence of the check, I should certainly be forced to believe after seeing old Garbould's manner toward you. I congratulate you, my dear fellow.

Fred laughed and blushed, and went off evidently well pleased with himself, with me, with Garbould, and with the world in general. Well, the result of it all was that Fred and Laura were carried. Mrs. Rutledge did all in her power to break off the match, but when she found that was impossible she consented with as good grace as might be to an early marriage. Miss Windom said that she had given her word that if Fred got an article accepted she would marry him, and she was determined to keep her promise. Besides, she argued that the very fact of the acceptance of his story by so high an authority as The Eclectic was proof positive that Fred had a great literary career before him. Whether Mrs. Rutledge was convinced by Miss Windom's logic I have my reasons for doubting. It is far more probable that she was finally urged to forego her opposition to the marriage rather by motives of policy than because she was converted to a more hopeful view of Fred's future as an author. Miss Windom was an heiress, and she was just coming of age. Her guardians could, perhaps, make her uncomfortable for a short time by withholding their consent. But in the end she would marry the man of her choice, and then she was not likely to forget those who had evilly treated her. It would, on the whole, be pleasanter to have Laura friendly. And, after all, what real difference did it make to Mrs. Rutledge whether the girl threw herself away on a pauper or not? So I think that astute lady argued the matter to herself, and the conclusion was that she consented to a marriage in the spring.

So when the winter had passed away and there was a smell of early violets in the air they were married. The event took place at one of the fashionable uptown churches. Kitty and I went. It was a hot, flower scented, stuffy affair, like all church weddings. I don't remember that Fred looked any less miserable than other men do under similar circumstances. I do remember, though, that the bride was radiant. Kitty says her dress was of cream white, set in with front of point lace, and veil of the same; corsage decollete. Her ornaments were diamonds, and she carried a bouquet of white jasmine. All that sounds like Jenkins, I know, but I want to be covrect, and I have written it down just as Kitty gave it to me. Well, in this state Miss Laura Windom traveled up the long aisle to the chan-cel leaning on Mr. Rutledge's arm, and in precisely the same state. Mrs. Fred Raeburne walked down the same aisle ten minutes later leaning on her husband's arm. And I give you my word they looked so proud and handsome and triumphant both of them, as they walked out of the church together to their carriage, that for once in a way I wasn't sorry to see it done. They were gone some weeks, and when they returned a grand reception was given to them by the Rutledges. I went, but Kitty could not be persuaded, though ardently entreated thereto by Mrs. Fred and her husband. She begged off on the plea that she was nothing but a little nemian anyway, and not at all fit for society people or their ways. We all people on their ways. into their pretty house over on the west side, Kitty told me she wanted me to take her up to see them. So one pleasant, Sunny afternoon we went up.

They were both there. I had told Fred we were coming, and he was on name, with that proud look of superiority peth-liar to young husbands pervading his good looking phis. Well, of course Kitty had to be taken up stairs and shown all of Mrs. Books words now elether. of Mrs. Raeburne's new clothes. Fred and I retired to the dining room to dis-cuss a small bottle of wine in honor of the event. By and by the ladies came down, and then we were shown all the new silver and the other presents with which the young couple had been duly loaded.

In the midst of this pleasing occupa-tion the front door bell rang and pres-ently the servant announced Mr. Gar-

"Old Garbould!" exclaimed Fred. "Show him right out here, eh, Laura?"
Of course Laura wanted whatever Fred wanted. So Garbould was introduced. Another bottle of wine was opened, and the young people were pledged in due form, Garbould making a very clever little talk, I remember, of a kind appropriate to the occasion. Upon its conclusion, and just as he was about to set his glass down on the table, he remarked suddown on the table, he remarked sud-

"By the way, Raeburne, I was almost forgetting. I've another thing to congratulate you about. Your article has come out. I wish you joy. It is really a very clever bit of writing, indeed."

Raeburne blushed and muttered something about praise from Sir Hubert Stan-But where did you see it?" broke in Laura, impetuously. "Oh, dear, I'm so anxious to look at it." "Nothing easier," said Garbould. "The magazine is issued today. They were just putting them out on the news stands as I came up on the elevated. I bought a copy, and one of the first things my eye lighted on was your husband's article."

"Where is it?" asked Laura, eagerly.
"Out in my overcoat pocket," said the critic. "I'll go fetch it."

critic. "I'll go fetch it."

So Garbould brought the magazine, and Raeburne, excusing himself, plunged into the book, Laura the while looking over his shoulder and reading no less eagerly than he. Garbould began to expatiate on the excellence of Fred's style to Kitty in his usual bumptious fashion. When the "Old-man-who-knows-it-all" condescends to commend an author he is just as fierce about it as when he condemns, which, by the way, he usually does.

Garbould wearies me when he mounts his hobby of criticism. So I turned away from him and began to watch Fred and his wife. Every feature of Laura's face was lighted up with interest and pride as her eyes ran rapidly from one side of the page to the other. Fred's face, on the contrary, was a picture of consternation. Presently he laid the book down on the table. Laura looked at him in surprise. "What's the row, Fred?" said I.

"Why, hang it all, there's some misalte. This is not my article at all."
"Not 'A Carnival of Crime?" I inmired, while Garbould stopped his flow eeb and cocked up his ear. "Not my 'Carnival of Crime,' inly," said Fred. "Listen to this: 'A cal of Crime: Being a protest

a very clever protest it is, too," "But it's not mine," said Fred, considerably chopfallen. "Who the mischief can have done this?" He stared disconsolately at the magazine as if he expected to find an answer to over at her. "You did it," he exclaimed, pointing his finger at her. "Well, if I did," she Kitty laughed. said, "I am sufficiently up in the law to know that I can't be compelled to testify against myself. But whoever did it," she continued, "you oughtn't to be very angry. See what it has brought you."

And she pointed to the lovely face that was leaning over Fred's shoulder.
"Kitty," I put in at this juncture, "let me tell you one thing—no, two things! These young people, like all the rest of us, will have to row their own boats. Also, people who push their noses into other people's affairs are apt to get them sadly pinched." "You might add a third," Kitty responded. "It is often a very good thing to forget and forgive. You will, won't you, Fred?" she exclaimed, holding out

Fred grasped it heartily, and I fancied there was a gleam of tears in his eyes as he turned away to explain matters to his wife and Garbould. "The Old-man-whoknows-it-all" was at first disposed to feel injured, as if a fraud had been perpetrated upon him personally. But upon reflec-tion it was apparent that all he had said about the article was as true now as it had been before, so that he was not compromised in any way.

"Kitty," said I, when some time after we took our leave and were wending our way homeward, "Kitty, so that was the reason you were anxious to get rid of me that evening, was it?" "Of course, stupid," she said.

THE END.

Samples of Adulterated Foods

The state of Massachuseets has given a good deal of attention to the subject of food adulterations, and the report of the chemist in charge has been recently published. During the year 1887, 1,678 samples of articles used as food were examined, of which 1,178 proved to be pure and 498 to be adulterated. Of the impure only a very small portion, and these rarely used in large quantities, were found to be adulterated with ingredients dele-terious to health. The chief of these were molasses, of which twenty-five sam-ples out of eighty-five were found to contain corn glucose or salts of tin. or both; baking powders, of which twenty-one samples out of twenty-nine were found to contain alum and extract of almonds, two samples out of nine being found to contain nitro-benzol. Nearly all the adulterants were found to be harmless ingredients added to cheapen the product, and the purchaser, while being defrauded, was injured only in his pocket.

The American people are bargain hunt-ers; they buy things because they appear to be cheap. To accommodate them much of the food is adulterated. Coffee is cheapened with burned rye and chicory; ginger contains rice and cornmeal; allspice has buckwheat; honey has glucose; butter has lard, and lard has tallow; maple sugar has muscovado; olive oil has cottonseed oil, and so on to the end of the chapter. The manifest remedy for this is for people to patronize reliable dealers and pay fair prices for their goods. If they invite fraud by demanding cheap goods they are more than likely to get both.—Chicago

FROM THE DIARY OF DETECTIVE DENIG SIMMONS, OF THE BANK DETAIL OF THE

Early in the spring of 1872 the boarders at Mrs. Frelinghuysen's house, on West Adams street, felt themselves constrained Adams street, felt themselves constrained to discuss and decide a very delicate question. For some time previous the conduct of Mrs. Alice Claypole had given them great concern. This lady was the wife of a middle aged lawyer of good standing, who seemed devotedly attached to her, and was blind to the many weaknesses of her character, and oblivious of the fact that her bearing in male society was a subject of unfavorable comment in the well conducted establishment of the estimable Mrs. Frelinghuysen.

Mrs. Claypole's firtations were the talk of the neighborhood, and her bald headed, good natured husband came in for a goodly share of that pity and compassion goodly share of that pity and compassion which the world has ever in store for persons apparently unconscious of their own misfortunes.

"Poor old Claypole" was an oft repeated remark; "some one ought to open his eyes and let him know the full iniquity of his wife's misconduct.'

But none undertook this delicate mission, and "poor old Claypole" continued to idolize his charming and fascinating spouse—charming and fascinating not only to him, but to some half dozen other gentlemen who were said to languish in the sunshine of her smiles.

Mrs. Claypole, to make matters more piquant and interesting to her fellow boarders, was not a beautiful woman, as the term goes. She was tall and shapely, however, dressed with becoming taste, and carried herself with a stately grace that never failed to elicit remarks of ad-

Her features were somewhat irregular and heavy in repose, but when she became interested in conversation, or, better still, interested in conversation, or, better still, when she was aiming at a conquest, her face lighted up with the ardor of her thoughts, and her big blue eyes flashed dangerously from beneath half drooping lids fringed with long, dark eye lashes that tried in vain to screen the passionate fire of amorous giances.

No; Mrs. Claypole was not a beautiful woman, but she had that subtle power of charming which is more fascinating than beauty and plays the deuce with the virtuous instincts of mankind.

Mr. and Mrs. Claypole had lived at the Frelinghuysen establishment two months when the boarders thought it high time to arrive at some conclusion as to the alleged improprieties of her conduct.

Not content with the conquest of full grown and bearded men, the fair Alice, who was thirty if she was a year, had re-cently shown a liking for the society of young men in their teens. Three or four of these susceptible young fellows danced in constant attendance upon her. They ran her errands, escorted her to the theatre, took her to supper after the play, and acted spooney generally in the man-ner peculiar to lovesick lads. And, what was most exasperating to the critics of mature age, Mrs. Claypole seemed to enjoy this hoidenish homage. She was soft and soothing, even motherly, in her demeanor toward her young admirers. She would stroke their cheeks and pat their heads lovingly, call them brave boys, and sometimes—so Miss Goggles, the ancient spinster, who occupied the first floor hall bedroom, and was ever on the alert to spy out the moral delinquencies of her neighbors, averred—kiss them tenderly and tell them to be good and true and devoted to their

"She calls herself their mother, the artful wretch," reported Miss Goggles, with a look of horror in her watery eyes; "she ought to be horsewhipped!"
No wonder Mrs. Frelinghuysen's boarders were stired to the very depths of their honest hearts. Such vagaries on the part of a married woman were reprehensible in the highest degree. They called for an expression of virtuous indignation. Mr. Claypole ought to be informed of his wife's moral obliquity. It was a burning, scandalous shame that such a nice, high minded, honorable old gentleman should have the wool pulled over his eyes by this wicked woman, and he a lawyer, too, with a professional knowledge of the relief which could be speedily gained in the divorce court.

Then it was that the boarders came to the unanimous decision that Mrs. Claypole was a designing, heartless coquette that her society should be tabooed, and that poor old Mr. Claypole should receive a broad hint of what was going on, with a view to a prompt disruption of his marital ties.

The conveyal of this hint was deputed to James Hadley, clerk in a downtown lace store, who had worshiped at the shrine of the fascinating blonde when she first appeared at the boarding house, and whose attentions had been suppressed with a scornful derision which still rankled in his virtuous breast, and made him accept the mission with revengeful

And when Mr. Hadley finished his recital of Mrs. Claypole's shortcomings and suspected peccadillos, which he delivered with many pious sighs and groans about the inconstancy of woman, he was almost petrified by "poor old Claypole's" emphatic rejoinder:

'Ill break every bone in your carcass! "You confounded idiot!" cried the lawyer, shaking his fist in Hadley's face; "you lace peddling dolt! If I hear another word of this Fil break every bone in your assinine carcass!

If Hadley had been a man of good com-mon sense he would have thought twice before meddling with the conjugal affairs of Mr. and Mrs. Claypole. Students of social philosophy have long recognized the dangers of such interference. Husbands and wives may fight like cats and dogs, they may be guilty of the grossest kinds of infidelity, but we betide the rash individual who essays to patch up their quarrels or smooth the wrinkles in their code of mutual morality.

I have received the agency for Victoria county for the Celebrated Karn Organ, manufactured at Woodstock, Ont., received the only silver medal, highest award over all manufacturers, at the Dominion Exhibition, 1883, 81 John, N.B. This was the last medal ever awarded Organin the Dominion of Canada.

The Karn Organ also received the last medal awarded Organs at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition, Toronto 1882.

Those in want of a good Organ should call at my ston and see for themselves. I intend to sell cheap, as I keep no men and horses on the road, therefore I don't want any profits on men and horses.
