wrong medicine. He died from the effects.

This story from Belleville seems almost too gyod to be true. Charles Edwards, a theological student in Albert college, is likely to fail heir to a large fortune—said to amount to one million dollars—which was left by his mother, who died on the continent of Europe sixteen years ago. Edwards was sent to Canada on the death of his mother, when little more than two years old, and was brought up by a Thurlow farmer, whose name he assumed. He is in correspondence with parties in England on the subject, and a lawyer has advised him that he will have no difficulty in wresting the property from his relatives, who have usurped it.

A Belleville despatch says: There was a quiet marriage at St. John's church this morning, and the story as told by an intimate acquaintance of both parties sounds very romantic. Some 17 years ago Mr. Reginald Lambton Sewell, a son of the Chief Justice of Quebec, was teller in the local branch Bank of Montreal. He was handsome, affable, fond of society, and was courted by a wide circle of friends. He fell in love with a Belleville belle, but courted in vain. His suit was rejected repeatedly, and, finally despairing of success, he gave up his position and left the city. For a time he was in the Imperial bank at Toronto, but after a time disappeared entirely, at least 20 far as his Believille friends were concerned. In the meantime thelady of his choice was woosd and won by the late Charles W. Bell. They had been married but a few years when Mr. Bell died, leaving a young widow and an infant seminated his a first. He has been absent for some four years, but returned yesterday. The result of this visit was that a license was secured in the evaluation of the maptial knot and the couple teck the next train for the east. The whole affair was se quickly and quickly carried of the bride know of it, but there are seen to the first leave and think of the cid adags. What is the nature and ceremonial significance of leaven, calling for this rigid and formal expulsion?

The most prominent idea, and the one which applies equally to all cases of prohibition, is connected with the corruption which the leaven itself had undergone, and which it communicated to the bread in the process of fermentation. And one has but to collate the texts as the New Testament in which the term is used, to find that this is the almost unvarying typical significance.

It is evident, then, that there was a deep prophetical and symbolic idea connected with this rigid exclusion of leaven from with this rigid exclusion of leaven from the passover service. The paschal meal must be without leaven, as typifying, we believe, the incorruptibleness of "Christ, our Passover," to whom it pointed.

How solemn and impressive was the ceremony of purging the house of leaven on the eve of the passover, as described by Edersheim, the eminent Hebrew Christian writer. He says, "The head of the house was to search with a lighted candle all places where leaven was papally kept house was to search with a lighted candle all places where leaven was usually kept, and to put whatever of it was found in a place where no portion of it could be carried away by accident." After doing this, a solemn protestation was made to God: "All the leaven that is in my possession, that which I have seen, and that which I have not seen, be it null, be it accounted as the dust of the earth."

This is a description of the passover service in the time of Christ, and it accords with the rigid requirements of the Levit.

vice in the time of Christ, and it accords with the rigid requirements of the Levitical law and with the synagogue practice of the day. Now those who hold that fermented wine was used in the institution of the Lord's supper have it laid on them to prove that Christ deliberately violated this law of God; the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them, and made ready the passover; they brought unleavened bread and leavened wine with which to keep the feast, notwithstanding it had been written in the law of Moses, "Neither shall there leaven be seen with thee in all thy quar-

HOW GORDON DIED.

Murdered by the Treacherous Mahidists
—Story of a Greek Spectator.

New York, Jan. 19.—The Sun's London special says: - The mail from Suakim brings despatches from Gen. Grenfell. among which is the latest and this time an absolutely authentic account of the last hours of Gen. Gordon. The account, which has been officially declared to be true, is furnished by Demetrio Gorgia, a Greek, who was present at the capture and sack of Khartoum. He says: "I was at Khartoum the night it; was taken. The NILE HAD GONE BACK so that part of the city was open. Gordon did not construct fresh trenches and ramparts, because he thought there was sufficient troops to defend the city. There were three thousand, I think. The gaps and all round about were held by a large force under Farig Pasha. That night Farig moved his treops, especially the blacks, from the gap, as all the other soldiers were wanted on the other soldiers were wanted on the other side. Gordon had perfect confidence in Farig. The attack took place at two points. At the largest gap their was no resistance.

or even a few of them had arrived even one hour before the attack took place Khartoum would not have been taken and Gordon's troops would have fought to the last. Farig had sent word to the Mahdi 'Unless you attack to night all is lost.' On that night all was blood and flames. The city had passed over from the command of Gordon to the Mahdi. It was a dreadful night. The air echoed with horrible ahrieks, yells, lamentations and wallings and smelt of blood. I had three friends, Greeks. I hastened to rescue them. I had two Mahdiet uniforms given me by an Arab friend. One I gave to one friend, putting on the other myself. It was nearly daybreak when I took my friends to my house. Some Arabs rushed in telling me I ought to go to the government house—the seraglio they called it. At once I saked why. They replied, 'All the great officers of the Mahdi have gone there IF THE BRITISH ARMY

When they saw that the third friend had no Mahdist uniform they slew him. We were then taken into the courtyard. I saw Gordon Pasha smoking a cigarette on the balcony facing the river. He had entered at the back of the palacs, entering the yard where the sycamore tree is. Georgia Demetrico, the principal medical officer of the Soudan and the provinces, and Nicola Lemindata, the Greek consul, were with him. Five hundred derviehes, who had been sent by the Mahdi with special orders to take Gordon alive, stood at the foot of the staircase. I went up stairs, being sent by the men below, who were vociferating Gerdon Pasha, Gordon Pasha. Gordon coolly left the baicony. 'Fly,' said the other two, 'while there is yet time. Go is at the little doer and take the boat.' 'Shall I fly and leave my post?'' TO KILL GORDON PASEA.

GORDON REPLIED INDIGNANTLY. "That indeed would be a diagrace. I she not fig." He then went to his laner roos and conned his full uniform and swow rendered according to the usages of war. But Nasans, one of the generals, anatched hold of his aword, at the came time in a brutal and mort cowardly manner striking Gordon an unexpected blow. The Pasha would have fought desperately had he thought he would not be treated in an honorable manner. He felt, rolling down down the stairs. As he rolled another general speared him on the left side, inflicting a dangarous wound.

THUS DIED GORDON. I was there a spectator to the ghastly deed. I got cut of the way when he rolled to the bottom of the stairs. Some say that Gordon was cut up into little pieces, but others relate that they embalmed his body and took it to the Mahdi. There were bodies cut up, but I am inclined to believe these were bodies of the consul and the doctor."

Friday while akating. Herbert Milligan hearing their cries ran to the rescue with a board, but before he reached the lads he went through and immediately sank, the only apparent struggle being the raising of his hand above water. His wife, sister and mother watched with alarm his galliant attempt to save the lads. They saw him lose his own life. His wife was a bride of two week, being a daughter of Henry Benjamin of Earnestown. She had to be dragged into the house. Meanwhile the boys were rescued, Paterson getting on the ice and keeping his comrade from sinking until help arrived.
