The Grand Trunk railway is preparing to make a practical experiment with the electric car heating apparatus invented by Mr. R. Fuller, an employee in the G. T. R. shops at Portland, Me. It consists of a dynamo placed in the baggage car, power being taken from the moving axles. A metal bar is placed in a tank of water in each car. Pipes from the tank extend all around the car. The metal bar is to be heated by an electric current, thus heating the water in the tank and pipes.

— A hig leapard on exhibition in Boston

—A hig leopard on exhibition in Boston acted queerly for several days, and as it seemed to be in great pain an examination was made, which revealed a good-sized piece of wood wedged between two of the animal's teeth. The sliver penetrated the gums, and Boston's dog executioner was called into service to remove it. He laasoed the beast and after an effort succeeded, by the aid of a pair of forceps, in removing the wood. The leopard soon improved, and at last accounts was as well as ever.

The Dominion government will be petitioned for aid to the new line, and the legislature will enable the town to take stock in or bonus the road. Mass meetings are being held every week at Cobourg, Warkworth, Burnley, Grafton and other places along the proposed route. The enthusiasm appears to be general.

Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria was found dead in his bed Wednesday morning. It was at first reported he had died from an attack of apoplexy.... ted suicide because it was opitional with him to take his own life or fight a duel with the brother of a princess, who is a member of ene of the highest Austrian families and whom he had seduced. When concalment was no longer possible the princess confessed her shame to her brother, who gave Prince Rudoiph the alternative of committing suicide or fighting a duel. The Pall Mail Gazette further says that the doctors who were summoned refused to sign a certificate to the effect that Prince Rudolph's death was due to apoplexy, and that a great scene ensued. One of the doctors told the Neue Freie Presse the real facts, which that paper published.

The Wiener Zeitung says: Professor Wiederhofer, who performed the autopsy on the remains of Crown Prince Rudolph, found a large wound on the side of the head, which must have caused instant deeth. The revolver, with one chamber discharged, was found on the bedside close to the right hand of the dead man. The position in which it was found proves beyond a doubt that the crown prince committed suicide. The pericranium was torn and the skull and bones were partially shattered. The report of the revolver was heard by no one, the crown prince's attendants having left the house to make preparations for an excursion. Several members of the crown prince's entourage state that during the last few weeks the crown prince had manifested signs of morbid nervous excitement, and therefore the Wiener Zeitung says the view that the shooting was the result of temporary mental derangement must be adhered to. Some time previous to his death the crown prince complained of headaches, which were attributed to an injury to the head which he sustained by a fall from a horse last autumn.... A Vienna telegram says: The contents of Rudolph's letter to his father, Jan. 30th, were kept secret for two days, and were divulged only to clear his memory from suspicions worse than the trath. Rudolph had contemplated suicide for years. When returning from the funeral of Ludwig of Bavaria, he said: "I fear my
