The engine struck the last or passenger car and drove it forward, completely telescoping two freight cars which were part of the train. The passenger car contained but two passengers, a widowed lady named Isabella Law and her grand-daughter about ten years of age, who were both killed.

-A London cable says: The honors of the debate Friday night were carried off by Mr. Gladsone, who made a truly amazing speech of two hours and a quarter in duration, full of animation, studded all over with sharp points against his adversaries, abounding with dramatic touches which the most consummate actor in the world might have envied. It is wonderful that the man, in his eightieth year, should be able to endure the physical fatigue of delivering so elaborate a speech, not taking into account all his marvellous faculty of composing extemporaneously over so long a time, for he used very few notes. In the grand parliamentary manner of old days there is no one to approach Mr. Gladstone. His face is as full of expression as his words. As a rule, too, there is a dignity in his bearing and manner which assuredly the new school can never hope to rival. Differ widely from him as some of us may, we must all feel that when he is gone we shall never see his like again... The next greatest impression was undoubtedly produced by the short but remarkable speech of Mr. Parnell. He rose a few minutes after eleven and delivered with much more emphasis than is usual with him a pungent, forcible, but withal singularly moderate address. He evidently had a general election, whenever it may come, well before his mind. Hence his declaration that a tion, full of animation, studded all over Binscarth, Man., has fallen heir to $1,000,000 by the death of an uncle in Hagland.

A PRIMET FROM AMERICA.

One day last July a young Irish-American priest, Rev. Maurice J. Dorney of hicago, accompanied by Rev. Herbert ourn, also of Chicago, sent his card to ir. Paruell at the house of commons, ather Dorney informed Mr. Paruell that a had a package of documents to deliver, lased in his hands the night before he aid, evidence that would reveal the forger ries and identify the forger of the letters rinted in the Times. Father Dorney resived a telegram from Alexander Sullian of Chicago, asking him to meet Patick Egan at a railway station in New Cork the night before he sailed for Liverool. He did ac, and Egan and Father loon, asking him to meet Patick Egan at a railway station in New Cork the night before he sailed for Liverool. He did ac, and Egan and Father loon, asking him to meet Patick Egan at a railway station in New Cork the night before he sailed for Liverool. He did ac, and Egan and Father loon, asking him to meet Patick Egan at a railway station in New Cork the night before he sailed for Liverool. He did ac, and Egan and Father loon, and all night. The priest learned that he principal proof of this rested on other letters which had already been printed in a Dublin newspaper, a comment was natural upon the want of intelligence location than the nature of the package became paperent to Mr. Paruell he was deeply facted.

The depression visible for letters in not finding this out before it purchased the forgeries, but the revelations of the past two days turn this want of intelligence into gross and hopeless stupidity. By his own word of mouth, this Pigott can priest, Rev. Maurice J. Dorney of Dunn, also of Chicago, sent his card to Mr. Parnell at the house of commons. Father Dorney informed Mr. Parnell that he had a package of documents to deliver, placed in his hands the night before he sailed from New York. It contained, he saile vidence that would reveal the forgeries and identify the forger of the letters printed in the Times. Father Dorney received a telegram from Alexander Sullivan of Chicago, saking him to meet Patrick Egan at a railway station in New York the night before he sailed for Liverpool. He did so, and Egan and Father Dorney sat up all night. The priest learned the whole story. He told Mr. Parnell he had carried that package with more solicitude than if had been millions.

apparent to Mr. Paruell he was deeply affected. The depression visible for months on his pale face began to soften, and during the recital of the story he yielded several times to emotion. When the story itself was over, he asked with painful apprehension how many men knew what the package contained. Father Dorney replied that only Egan, Sullivan and himself were familiar with it, but Patrick Ford of the Irish World would be taken into confidence by Egan. Mr. Parnell was delighted. He feared that somebody might inform the Times. A series of interviews followed, participated in by Father Dorney, Mr. Paruell, Sir Charles Russell, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Labouchers.

DISCOVERY OF THE FORGER. apparent to Mr. Parnell he was deeply

DISCOVERY OF THE FORGER. The discovery that Pigott was the forger was made by Egan, in Lincoln, Neb. Egan writes that he was sorely perplexed by the forged letters, fac-similes of which he got in the London Times. The signature of those attributed to him was remarkably good. Expressions and odd abbreviations peculiar to him were in the text. He considered as the possible forger each of several men whom the Parnellites suggested, or suspected, but none could have had letters from him which would have made the spurious concoctions possible. He recalled Pigott, but he had been so long dead in politics and covered with accumulated shame that Egan dismissed him from mind. He remembered that Pigott had been in forgeries years before, but the idea that he might be connected with these seemed absurd. In accutinizing the forged fac-similes he finally discovered that one, signed with his name, was written at a certain address in Paris. The recollection flashed upon him that Pigott was the only man to whom he had ever given it. Pigott had written asking for a confidential address to which he might send important information. Egan, who is methodical in habit, had saved his correspondence for years. He has been accustomed to writing on the fly leaf of a letter received his answer to it, and then copying the answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the leater and answer to the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the leater and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the leater and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the leater and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the formed to write and answer to be sent to his correspondent. Egan writes that he was sorely perplexed and then copying the answer to be sent to his correspondent. Thus he had both the letter and answer together. He found Pigott's letters, and by comparing them with the h indwriting of the forged letters he saw he had the forger. He submitted the letters written by Pigott to experts, with the fac-similes of the forged letters. They detected characteristic neguliarities with the fac-similes of the forged letters. They detected characteristic peculiarities which were confirmed under the microscope. Egan had Pigott's letters and the forgeries photographed and started for Chicago, where he placed all the papers before Alex. Sullivan, who is a lawyer.

A BRIEF DRAWN EP. A brief was drawn up by him and Sullivan. It related to the chief incidents in Pigott's career. Years before when Pigott tried to sell the Irishman to Parnell and Egan, he furnished an inventory by a well-known Dublin accountant, apparently authentic, showing the value of the property. Egan proved the inventory was false and that Pigott had forged the accountant's signature. A man in Pigott's newspaper office contributed to the Boston Pilot. His nom de plume was Leo, After his death a relative discovered that Patrick Donahue, then editor of the Pilot, had remitted to Leo a draft which his family never received, and that Pigott had opened the letter, forged an endorsement on the draft, and drawn the money. Pigott was compelled to disgorge. These facts Egan committed to writing. He found among his papers letters written by him, in which entire sentences appeared that were also in the forged letters, Pigott had traced these sentences carefully word for word. Then he interpolated or added other sentences or phrases, completely changing the meaning of the whole letter while preserving the integrity of other wasting. Dates were also charged authentic, showing the value of the proppletely changing the meaning of the whole letter while preserving the integrity of other portions. Dates were also changed to make the criminal interpolations applicable to illegal events. Hgan also found letters by Mr. Parnell which had been similarly used. Photographs of all these and of Pigott's begging and blackmailing letters were enclosed with the original in the package, with the memoranda recalling to Mr. Parnell all the circumstances attending the writing or receiving of each. This was the luggage the young clergyman fetched to Mr. Parnell.

INTERVIEWING PIGOTT. No hint of the contents became public until Mr. Parnell, in the interview with Pigott in the presence of Mr. Labouchere and Mr. Lewis, asked Pigott questions which disclosed that evidence was secured convicting Pigott of the crime. Pigott reported his fears to the Times or was watched by its detectives and traced into Mr. Parneil's presence. Then he had partially to confess to his employers. The attorney-general and his colleagues compelled LeCaron to testify and be as malignant as possible, for the purpose of breaking the force of Mr. Parneil's information about Pigott's antecedents. Pigott did not realize until he got into Sir Charles' clutches that no calumny could impair the effect of what Mr. Parneil knew. Had Egan not made the discovery, the truth of the letters could have only been denied, but their falsehood could never have been demonstrated. The situation would have been a Times victory and the rain of Mr. Pigott in the presence of Mr. Labouches demonstrated. The situation would have been a Times victory and the ruin of Mr. Parnell and the home rule party.

By his own word of mouth, this Pigott is shown now to have been for years a most utterly discredited man in Dublin, eking out a squalid existence by begging, swindling, and blackmailing, and to have been known as an irremediable secondered and unconscionable liar to everybody in town. No Irishman would lend him a shilling or even listen to his stories, and yet he was able to wheedle nearly $2,000 from the late Mr. Foster, and finally to palm off his clumsy forgery upon the London Times by merely appealing, with plausible glibness, to their political aspiration and animostites.

It is this revelation which has the deepest significance, for it is an object lesson on the dull ignorance of the Irish character, disdain for Irish opinion, and stolid self-confidence as against everything Irish, which now, as a century ago, make the English rule in Ireland as ridiculous as it is exasperating.

Beyond the fact that Sir Charles Russell is exasperating.

Beyond the fact that Sir Charles Russell has a big mass of material for the further cross-torture of Pigott and intends to use it all to complete the nauseating picture of the man to the last line, it is impossible to the factors of the inquire that the factors of the inquire of the man to the last line, it is impossible to any what the future of the inquiry will be like. Of course the Times's case is dead—dead as Julius Cæsar—but if the relatives refuse to bury the corpse there is no sanitary law to compel them to do so. Apparently, the Times, having had credulity enough to walk into the trap, now has obstinacy enough to flounder about in it, even when the door is opened for its release.

Of course the obvious thing for the Times to do was to admit yesterday that it had been imposed upon, and to save its good faith at the expense of its perceptive faculties. But no such course was adopted, and by the end of another week it will be too late, for already people are beginning to hint that perhaps the Times was not so much a victim after all, and four days more of Pigott will very likely create a conviction that the Times was a conspirator rather than a dupe.

This feeling already envelopes smart young Mr. Houston, and the dearest hope of the Parenglitze is that it may be now.

young Mr. Houston, and the dearest hope of the Parnellites is that it may be possible to give him a taste of penal servitude.

of the Parnellites is that it may be possible to give him a taste of penal servitude. Curiously enough, they have little feeling against-Pigott. He is such a paltry and palpable old rogue that I fancy Irishmen are rather disposed to chuckle at the case with which he landed his Saxon prey. If anybody sends him to prison it will be the Times.

The political effect of this dramatic collapse of the Times's case, of course, will be enormous. Its parliamentary effect would be direct and crushing if the majority did not realize that dissolution spells destruction to the bulk of its members. Even as it is there will be a number of liberal unionists who will "rat" at the earliest opportunity, and if the government is unwise enough to persist in its effort to pass a bill paying the expenses of the Times it will certainly be thrown out.

The Parnellites are now jubilantly shout-The Parnellites are now jubilantly shouting that the Times must be made to pay for every thing, and certainly it seems to be no more than fair. We are also likely to have a surcease of the rumors that Mr. Walter will shortly be made a lord. It is not a peerage, but a disappearage, that will suit his case. ATTORNEY-GENERAL WEBSTER APOLOGISES

FOR THE TIMES. Attorney-General Webster in court said everybody would agree that nobody could attach any weight to Pigott's evidence, and it was his duty to ask the court to withdraw from considering the genuineness of the letters. The Times desired to express regret for publishing the letters, express regret for publishing the letters, and the proprietors of that paper would themselves more fully express their regrets later. He repudiated the allegation made by Sir Charles Russell that there was a foul conspiracy behind Pigott and Houston. If such a conspiracy existed the Times had no share in it. If the error of the Times extended beyond that the court should make the fullest enquiry.

Sir Charles Russell said he had hoped the attorney-general would have made a stronger statement.

THE TIMES' APOLOGY. The following is the Times' editorial in connection with the apology which it prints of Attorney-General Webster before the Parnell commission for the publication of the forged letters: "We desire to endorse and appropriate every word of the foregoing statement. It is our wish as it is our duty to do so. Moreover, Mr. Parnell having in the witness box stated that the letters are forgeries, we accept in every respect the truth of that statement. In these circumstances we deem it right to express our regret most fully and sincerely at having been induced to publish the letters as Mr. Parnell's or to use them in evidence against him. This expression of regret includes also the letters falsely attributed to Mr. Egan, Mr. Davitt and Mr. O'Kelly. It is excavely fitting now to enter into the circumstances under which we received and published them. We are bound, however, to point out that Pigott was not the person with whom we communicated. Moreover, we must add that we firmly believed the letters were genuine until the disclosures made by Pigott on cross-examination. It must be evident is our duty to do so. Moreover, Mr. Parnell municated. Moreover, we must add that we firmly believed the letters were genuine until the disclosures made by Pigott on cross-examination. It must be evident to all reasonable persons that if a conspiracy existed the Times was victimized by and not a party to it. Errors, of course, in judgment may have been committed and for them the penalty must be paid. It must be clearly understood that what we have done is altogether upon our own responsibility and in the public interest alone. This withdrawal of course refers explusively to the letters obtained from Pigott.
