nople is the absorbing topic treated of by the English and continental newspapers, and almost the sole theme of discussion in political circles. The newspapers, particularly the Berlin journals and the London tory organs, disclaim on behalf of the emperor any political object in his acceptance of the hospitality of the sultan, but they are nevertheless closely watching the movements of the expression, whose exit to Paris is cetensibly to see the great exhito Paris is cetensibly to see the great exhibition, and devoting an unusual amount of space to articles representing the crar-tone in a state of extreme anxiety lest the conference of the rulers of Germany and Turkey shall result unfavorably to Russia's aims. The crarewitch has received orders from St. Petersburg to return home by way of Odessa, which instructions are obviously given for the purpose of affording the crarewitch a pretext for visiting Constantinople, where he may to a great extent, if not wholly, count-rest the influence of if not wholly, count-ract the influence of the visit of the German en-peror to the suitan.... A London correspondent cables to a New York paper anent the Emperor William's visit to the sultan: This event is invested with a mysterious kind of interest from the fact that Abdul Hamid has never seen any crowned head of Europe since he became sultan, though his predecessor. Abdul Axis had waited every nor, Abdul Aziz, had visited every capital and continually received rival visitors in return. The present ruler is a atrangely shy, timorus man, who has apparently never recovered from the fright eustained on that fateful night of August, 1876, when he was taken out of the semi-captivity in which he was then living and brought in a state boat crowded with armbrought in a state boat crowded with armed men to the imperial palace. Abdul learned on the way that his brother Murad had been seized and dethroned a few hours before, and he fully expected that he, too, was to be imprisoned and probably murdered. The reaction, when he found himself acclaimed instead as sultan, was literally terrible. He has never been able to shake off the fear of being destroyed by some similar palace revolt, and broads continually over the possibility that Murad. ately as ever, despite all the efforts of the who is still confined in some unknown men to separate them. At last the ox prison, and is officially spoken of as insane, plunged his horn entirely through the thick may be brought out again and restored to whole of the present reign, and it is sur-mised that William will take the surest road to the sultan's confidence by assuring him that no sovereign or nation in Europe easy on this point, it is expected that the sultan will abandon his seclusion and visit some of the more important capitals of Western Europe, presumably under the auspices of the triple alliance. This whole episode of William's putting his finger into the eastern ple arouses the despeat interest in all political circles. He is still primarily regarded as a young man on the eager outlook for a chance to distinguish himself, and his entrance into the very inner dynamite chamber of European positics is therefore calculated, as the phrase goes, to make nervous people sit up. All his other visits fade into trivial pantamime speciacles in comparison with to day's interview between him and the sick man of Europe, for Germany has never before been even vaguely identified with any side of the eastern question. Her young emperor, in his desire to play the role of European dictator in all its completeness, has deliberately gone out of the way to bring Turkey within the scope of his influence. Naturally there are grave anxieties as to what will come of this.
