There was a good deal of spirit is Mir. Hallour's brief address, and he made it thoroughly interesting for the leader of the exposition. He met the charge that the Mail was not the organ of the opscettion during the last previncial election by pointing out that great buildies of that Seper were sent late every constituency to afficence the electorate against the caudidates of the government. He made s slaver hit when he said that the opposiclever list when he said that the opposition expected the liberale to stand by what he spoke from personal knowledge, that the spitation speaket the Roman Casholics, reised and premoted by the opposition for political purposes, was causing Catholic parents to withdraw their children from the public solocie, and causing the opening of new separate schools in different parts of the province. He quoted the enterment of Brother Bell, equal rights candidate for Torouto, to show with what grave deliberation, what positive ratuotance, Mr. Meredith frield to the demands of the lodges, and he quoted from the "Facts for Iriek Ricctors" to prove the beautiful consistency of Mr. Meredith's public record. Mr. Belfour's bright and polated sentences drive frequent appletus from the liberal benches and had a singularly appravating effect upon the oppositionists.

Mr. A wrey was quoting to the delight of the senembly, from the same famous document, when, to the utter surprise of every one familiar with the facts. Mr. Meredith's rose and desiled all responsibility for its preparation and direviation. Now, it is a fact that there is an affidavit in circulation which declares the this paughlet was written with Mr. Meredith's sanctions with his full concurrence. It is a fact that for years be has been held responsible

I write the sheet "Facts for the Irish Catholic linestors," extracts from which have recently appeared in the Globe of Toronto. While I was preparing it I had occasionally to make enquiries as to the nature and scope of any work from Mr. W. R. Meredith, to whom I had always easy access. This was devise the session of the Outsrio legiciature, and, as my researches were made in the parliamentary library, it was there that my consultations with Mr. Meredith generally took place. When the sheet "Facts for the Irish Catholic Mestory was complated a submitted a proof to Mr. Meredith in his private room in the Queen's lister, and I always a proof to Mr. Meredith in his private room in the Queen's lister, and I always a proof to Mr. Meredith in his private room in the Queen's lister, and I remember, too, that Mr. Meredith raised no objections to any statement made in said sheet after reading the proof. He smiled approvingly, and said, "It would do," or something similar to that.

Not with hat and ing Mr. Meredith's inter-Notwithstanding Mr. Moredith's inter-reption and deniel, remerkable indeed in-face of the statement just quoted, Mr. Awrey made a clover and foroidle speech. This was to be expected, for he long ago proved himself one of the heat debaters of of religions orders to teach in the expersite nehools of Outside was constitued by the act of 1923, and by the British North America act and the revised statutes, and that under the law any religious denomination could erect reperate rebools.

Clarke took equare ground against separate schools, and argued at issued in support of the measure submitted by his associates, and Mr. Preson traversed the old ground once again, undernished by many interruptions, and devoted in such time and issuesse to convince the house that it ought at least to pass his bill to take from Carbolics the right of representation on high schools the right of representation on high schools to show that he said not still simply that he would not force the belief on separate schools, but that he would not withold the belief if it was demanded by a respeciable minority. He admitted, however, that Mr. Roser's questions from the Mail was accurate, and declared frankly he was convinced the clared frankly he was convinced the minister had not sought to misrepresent him. The debate was adjourned on motion of the attorney general, MH. MOWAT'S MASTERLY SPEECH. The debate was recursed Intereday by Hon. Mr. Mowat. It never was more conspicuously demonstrated that Mr. Mowat is the master mind of the assembly. Be lifted the whole question above the level of paraton and partleanthip. He laid bare the course of the opposition is all its partient nakedness, and took high, broad, prodent ground upon all grave and dellcets leaves involved in the debate. He exted the house to remember that the questione raised by the d-bets were of great delicacy and ought to be carefully and generotally fire to d. The opposition made their whole apposit to Protestant confinent. They arrows to excite Protestant feeling in the house and to the deviatory, its pointed out that every one of the amendments to the law that are now attached had been made with the full concurrence of the apposition. Briefly then he narrated what had happened in the woods; the claim which the strange woman had made upon him; his hurried departure home and the subsequent finding of the woman in the

"But is that all?" asked May, clasping and unclasping her hands, and looking at them with wild, staring eyes. "Did

"Ay, that he did, my dear," said Paul Armstrong, placing his hand on her shoulder and hending overher tenderly. "He bade you be of good cheer, for all would be well; that you were to believe him innocent of everything; that he had never seen the woman before in all his life, and that no blow from him had struck her down. incomitable look "In that case, Mr. Armstrong," she said, "I would advise you to seave me and my opinions out of the matter altogether. Good night."

And with a low bow, which seemed to have a spice of mockery in it, she swept from the room. The lawyer mused a moment ere he thought of taking his departure. That girl knows more than she cares to confess," he muttered. "Well, well, it's no use going in for cross-examinations to-night. We will wait and see how the affair goes off before the magistrates to-morrow. Dear me! I wish some one would come down. I can't go back to that poor fellow without any message at "Incriminate myself! Sir, I do not understand you."

"I am sorry to say, Mr. L'Estrange," said the constable, still gently, for he re-spected the master of the park, and had had reason to know his kindness, "that Lhave a warrant here for your arrest for the attempted murder of Ruth Talbot, your wife. The lady states that you married her some two years ago under that assumed name; that some time since you left her in London saying you would be back soon; that through accident she discovered that you had come hither; that you met her in the woods, and she implored you to return to her. You broke from her; and then, when she rushed after you, you struck her down with one blow of your stick: then: finding she still lived, you struck her again and again. She states that it can all be easily proved; for a lady, hearing her cry, came upon the scene, saw the last blow, and when she recognized you, you fled."

Constable Merton was able to make this long speech without interruption, for Guy had staggered back, and leaned, (Continued next week)
