talking to Mrs. Driscoil when he complained of a pain about the heart region and saked her if she could not do something for it. She went up stairs to get some mustard, and at this moment the milkman drove up. Mr. Driscoil got the pitcher and started for the door, when he fell headforemost in the doorway, the pitcher breaking on the sidewalk and attracting outside attention. He was nicked up immediately. strention. He was picked up immediately, but only gasped three or four times and life was extinct. He was about fifty years of age and had been in his usual health.

-The body of a young man, about twenty years of age, was found on the pilot of the engine of Friday night's express by the enpileer on arrival at Waubaushene. From papers found on him his name was probably Wm. Burrows, and he had evidently come from Penetanguishene the day previous. There was no evidence of his being under the influence of liquor. The boy's presence on the pilot was simost unaccountable, the only clue being that the engineer remembered having struck something shout two miles from the station and thought at the time it was a sheep.
