Its worst form is found smeng the women of the upper working classes, some of whom consume over a pound of coffee a week. A similar danger is said to lurk in the excessive use of tea. Many persons are so given over to the tea habit that the want of tea at any meal in the day will produce a violent headache. This is analogous to the terrible depression which overtakes the alcohol drunkard when his supplies are suddenly out off. The excessive use of tea and coffee is often due to insufficient nutrition—people seeking in these beverages the stimulation which should come from good food,

The potatoes are so badly diseased that even the pigs are injured by eating them. In the district round about Youghal, including the notorious Ponsonhy estate, the farmers are ploughing all the potato land up with the intention of planting cabbages in the bope of providing some sort of food for the winter.
