The Canadian Boat Hymn.

J. W. SAVAOR, Sweetly let's join our Ev'ning Prayers, And give to the wind all worldly cares; We'll sing and row o'er life's rough sea, We're sailing to eternity: Blow breezes, blow the streams of Grace, The Haven of Glory's our landing place.

Vestings,
And the wine and waves His voice obey'd,
And the great deep by Him was made:
Blow breezes, blow the streams of Grace,
The Haven of Glory's our landing place. Faintly at times we pull the oar, Yet ev'ry stroke brings nearer shore; Cross winds, rough waves are in the way,

The dark's the night in which we sail

Pull strong the oar and humbly pray: Blow breezes, blow the streams of Grace, Make, make the Port, the tide runs high, Unfurl thy white streamers, the haven's nigh. The hills and dales of life look dim, We'll sing to our friends the farewell hymn Blow breezes, blow the streame of Grace, The Haven of Glory's our resting place.

And when the Port of Glory's gained, And when the Port of Citry's games, And full redemption we've obtained; With Angels above, Hozanna we'll sing, To IMMANDEL JESUS, our Pilot and King; Blow breezes, blow the streams of Grace, The Haven of Glory's our resting place.

And, with these concluding words, which were finished off with a hideous and most appropriate yell, the mysteterious and terrific visitant rushed with open arms and appalling shriek, towards the petrified gravediggers, who neither haddared nor had power to move from the spot they were in, during the whole of his, her, or its performance. The effect of this movement on the part of the midnight songster was rather curious. It instantly restored both Davie and Jamie to the full use of their physi-

With a yell or rather a pair of distinct yells, not a whit less tremendous than that which excited them, both the gravediggers now flew madly towards the door of the move of their escape; but still essertly pursued by their dreadful visitant, who however did not exhibit that knowledge of the localities of the place of which a ghost might have been expected to be possessed; for he, she or it, seemed to have censiderable difficulty in following out in the dark the track of the fugitives out in the dark the track of the fugitives | vantage.
