BLEB ON THE DESAR-
DINS ACCIDENT.
The following, which was written for The Warden in May, 1877, after the Desjarlais Canal accident at Hamilton, is now applied to the late Lathrop Railway tragedy.

Swing over an ice-bound river, a lofty ledge is seen.

Its columns noble pine trees, with ponderous bolts between.

Strove the coming band of men, his world's us labor gave.

Yet failed as the bending straw in the mighty camp of Fate.

The sun was steeping in the ruby West.
A golden glow lit the wintry air.
And an evening's lengthened shadows
Methought, foreboding, but I knew not why.

The heavens and snow-clothed earth were hushed.

The ocean lake lay still—
No breeze came rippling o'er its breast.
The sun was low, and the stars were dim.
For all above, below, around,
Death-like as the life-giving earth no sound.

Oswald! Oswald! Oswald! in its Cyclops' eye!
Rebels the iron charger upon its iron path.
And warn, kind hearts are beating.

A flash! a flash! a flash!
The children—parents—lovers—friends.
And merry songs are telling.
Of life, of pleasure, most dear—
Of those, perchance, most dear—
Whom I could tell you only know that
Death was! too near.

Oswald! Oswald! Oswald! in its Cyclops' eye!
Rebels the iron charger upon its iron path.
And warn, kind hearts are beating.

A flash! a flash! a flash!
The children—parents—lovers—friends.
And merry songs are telling.
Of life, of pleasure, most dear—
