

MRS. MONTGOMERY'S HEAR.

By a. ANNE BROWN

"So you have found my nephew?" Mrs. Annet Montgomery looked severely at the young girl who was sitting...

"Yes, I have found him," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

When he came to his hand being, and that she had her hand in the office of his aunt's favor.

"The first time that I saw him from her presence was certainly a very pleasant one."

"I suppose," he said, "that you were too late, if I had offered you a salary with a house, you would have come when I asked you."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I don't think so," said E. as I caught sight of a person in grey trousers standing among the bushes of a cherry-tree not very far from the kitchen door.

"This is a very unpleasant position," said he, "when I saw the tree."

"I am glad to hear that," said Mrs. Montgomery, "but I am sorry to hear that you have found him."

"I am glad to hear that," said the girl, "and he is a very good man, and I am very glad to see him."
