TRAINS MOVING SOUTH .- MAIL LINDSAY, ONT., CANADA, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1870.

I met her in the quiet lane One Subbath morning early:
The sun was bright, although the rain
Still glittered on the barley:
The lark was singing to his mate,
The wild bells chimed their warning

Again we met. The whispering leaves
Glanced night in sight and shadow,
The reapers piled their yellow sheaves,
The bees hummed o'er the meadow,
The royal sun rose up in state,
Our marriage day adorning:
The hells rang out—wide stood the gate
And neither of us was too late

What is life, and what are we? Only leaves upon a tree— tireen to-day, to-morrow sere; Then we are no longer here.

Others, fair and brave as we,

So shall we ; it is our lot Thus to die, and be forgot— By and by the tree will fall One oblivion waits for all.

wint the twilight to set the wet wood alight—so, on. With these words, and without awaiting a reply from his courade, he walked down a narrow deer-track that led to the stream, and soon stood by the stony bed of the Hurricane, at a spot where a basin of water, usually clear, but at this moment disturbed by the rain, is formed by a subterranean spring.

The storm now yielded in intensity, the thander resounded in the distant north, and is many places the blue sky pesped out through the gray masses of cleud which, driven by a south-east wind, moved athwart the valley in long strips.

The two men, however, seemed to take little pleasure in the beautiful evening, but were busily engaged in propariaz a fire, not merely as a protection against the by no means mild evening breeze, but to prepare for supper a few pieces of raw venison, which Preston took out of a freshly-stripped skin. Thompson now struck fire and lighted a patch of liner well rubbed with powder, while Preston brought come little dry splinters which he had cut out of a decayed tree. In a few moments a weak same rose, aroused by their united blowing and fanning.
