Situated as Captain Smiles was, exactly over his own cabin, he sould not see the flag, which was so indicative of who and what he was. The sudden return of the frigates boat was perfectly enigmatical to him.

Then Mark and Andrew heard another voice from the boat.

'You have a suspicious flag, Captain Smiles, on board.'

'Ah! 'Sts Joseph' to the rescue!'

Captain Smiles blew shrilly upon a silver whistle that he were auspended round his neck.' At least twenty of the pirate crew, who were crouching down is various places of concealment on the main deck of the 'St. Joseph,' sprang forward and, without fring a shot, overpowered by their force of numbers the five seames the licutenant, and the midshipman of the frigate. So utterir unexpected was the attack that shhough the licutenant out down two of his opponents, several of the seamen had not time to draw their cutlasses. In the midst of the tunalt there was a sudden splash in the sea.

The racselly mate of the 'St. Joseph' had managed to drop a twenty-four pound shot in the frigate's boat, which weet through it in a moment, leaving the seamen who had been left in charge of its struggling in the sea.

'Clear away—clear away!' cried Captain Smiles—caway with them.'

'Mark—Mark, rouse yourself!' cried Andrew, 'We must do something.'

The Lieutenant of the Juno' had reached his boat.

'Give way!' he cried. The cars simulation of the sea.

Captain Smiles stood on his quarter-deck, with his hat in his hand, howing and smiling.

It was the impulse of a moment, Mark seized the black flag of the pirate, and thrusting it through one of the oral call in windows with the exception of one corner, which he held firmly in his grasp, he let it flutter broadly out to to the breeze.

CHAPTER XVIII. A STRAY SHOT.

The moonlight on the deek of the St. Joseph was something wonderful. There was secreely a shadow, for the broad silver disc was right overhead, and its rays came down perpendicularly upon a seene that for interest and and excitement has rarely been equalled. About one half the pirate crew were on the main deek, with eager curiosity in their faces. Capt Smiles, as he had chosen to call himself, but whose real name was Manuel Demonio, stood upon the raised deck, attired in a stood upon the raised deck, attired in a

Mark pressed his hands in desperation against the back of a kind of pantry, when to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise it inmediately yielded, and the whole of the panuelling turned to his surprise. The opening thus revealed led directly out into a small galery that ran round the stern of the St. Joseph. A flood of moonight poured into the after-cabin.

'The Junol proving the will be careful directly He set his teeth hard, and was the picture of a brave man, determined to die without a word To contend against his fate was madness. He might protract it by a few words. He could only escape it by leaping into the sea. And at that anxious moment there came from far, very far off, the dull faint echo of a ship's gun.

'The Juno! She still signals for her bear here.

The lizuten ant was forced on to the plank by the two negroes.

'Farewell, comrades!' he cried, addressing the midshipman and the seamen; 'It is but a plunge, and all is over.'

The fatal moment had arrived. Another three steps and the lieutenant of the Juno would have passed the fulerum of the lever which the plank represented, and been planged into the sea. Then there was the sharp erack of a pistol shot from the stern of the St. Joseph. Captain Smiles, with a yell of pain, fell upon the deck. The utmost confusion immediately prevailed, in the midst of which a loud voice shouted: 'Officers and men of the Juno, aft!— aft! for your lives!'

Very well: then,' added the pirate if it is my duty to inform you that you life is perfectly in your own hands.'

How so?'

Captain Smiles pointed to the capstan, which looked in the moonlight like some singularly decorated altar, for it was covered with the black flag of piracy, the easter, on which was laid an old wornlooking book, bound in vellum.

It is a rule of our service,' added the pirate captain, 'that any and every prisoner has the option of saving his life by enrolling himself among us as a free companion.'

And can you suppose for a moment,' said the lieutenant, with indignation in the contrest, and which will just keep soul and body together. But for all this I am of opinion that we can hold out for some time yet, the new mayors being very active in organize canteens. The lack of gas makes candles and oil very dear and the streets are certainly very sombre.
