There would be no customers for the cast iron peaches and green apples which come early in the season; but for the bays, the doctors wouldn't have as much in curing cases of cho-lers mortus arising therefrom.

Bays can be useful when they have a mind to, and can sell news-papers, black boots, hold horses, and do chores.

In printing offices the boys are known as devils printers have a plain way of speaking.
Boys individually are better than

If there were only one boy in the world, I think he would be a good boy; it generally takes at least two

A boy begins to be a nuisance when he is eight years old. How soon he grows out of it depends on circumstances. Some never do.

circumstances. Some never do.
It is questionable whether boys lead an enjoyable existance. They take a great deal of fun at other people's expense, but they have always grievances. They would like to have heir own way a little more, and a pretty way it would be.

Give a boy a choice of all occupations in life, and the chances are that he would prefer to be a Robinson Crusoe on a desert island or a captain of a band of robbers, such as he had read about, and seriously thinks of gaing into one or the other of those desirable occupations when he gets to be a man. He has a great respect for a stage driver and the captain of a canal boat—the e is an idea of a canal boat—the e to be a man. He has a great respect for a stage driver and the captain of a canal boat—the e is an idea of command in these positions that takes his ideas. His idea of being a man is having plenty of money doing what you please, and being able to smoke or chew tobacco without getting sick over it.

Books for Mechanics, That sort of egotism which prompts mechanics and inventors to neglect the means of personal improvement and advance in their professions, subplied by books, has prevented many from achieving the measure of success to which their natural endowments entitle them, and is at the present day seriously affecting the condition of Mechanics in general. Mechanics, as a rule, read newspapers stories, and some history, but as a rule, they neglect the books replete with technical information, touching directly upon their peculiar avocation.—They are want to scoff at the tion.—They are want to scoff at the idea of learning an art from books, and to place reliance on their personal guide.

A man might in time learn all about the streets, alleys, parks and arburbs of New York by unsided observation, but a well-edited guide book would save him nine-tenths the labor necessary to accomplish such a task without assistance.

We therefore advocate the use of books by mechanics, not as a substitute for personal experience, although they are in this way often very valuable; but we urge their use principally on the ground that they assist in enlarging and systematizing personal experience and preventing waste of time in the search for facts already discovered. works relating to his business. Verifying the facts stated in these books by his own experience, or, it may be discovering that some things stated as facts are errors, cannot fail to enlarge his mind and supply him with practical resources for emergencies, which, will not only increase his self-respect, but increase the pecuniary rewards of his efforts. So true is that we do not recollect a reading mechanic who did not rise in his profession, and who, though perhaps not acquiring fortune, failed to secure the respect always accorded to manifest superiority.

The following is a salutatory of an Oregon editores; "We have served a regular apprenticeship at working—at washing, serubbing, patching, darning, ironing, ph i i sewing, raising babies, milking, churning and poultry raising. We have kept boarders, taught scheol, taught music written for the newspapers, made speeches, and carried on an extensive millinery and dressmaking business. We can prove to the public that this work has been well done. Now, having reached the age of thirty-six, and having brought up a family of boys to set type, and a drughter to run the milline y store, we propose to edit and publish a newspaper, and we intend to publish as one of the permanent institutions of the cosmitry."
