

Suppose a fellow that has nothing, married a gal what has nothing, is her things his'n or his'n her'n, or is his'n and her'n both his'n?

Old Dick, who is a shade or two blacker than there is any need of, says he does hate 'less yet March winds, dey is so tannin'.

A Detroit man who had an ear for music, confessed as much when he frankly owned that 'if I were the proprietor of a hand-organ, I'd expressly to play 'Old Hundred,' I couldn't get over seventy-five out of it.

A gentleman was introduced to a young lady, recently, and said to her as follows: "Where do you live when you are at home?" to which she promptly replied, "When I am at home I live there."

"I am speaking," said a long-winded orator, "for the benefit of posterity." "Yes," said one of his audience, "and if you keep on much longer, your audience will be here."

"If you like practical joking, just imagine two strangers, previously unknown to each other, the one is dead but don't stand around."

"There's no use talking, I'm going to get married," said a bachelor acquaintance the other day, while he was engaged in sewing. Here I worked just twenty minutes, by the watch trying to get the needle threaded, and then, just as I succeeded, I pulled the thread out. Finally I got it threaded again, and sewed, after sewing this button on good and strong, I had I've got it on the wrong side, and will have to begin my work over again."

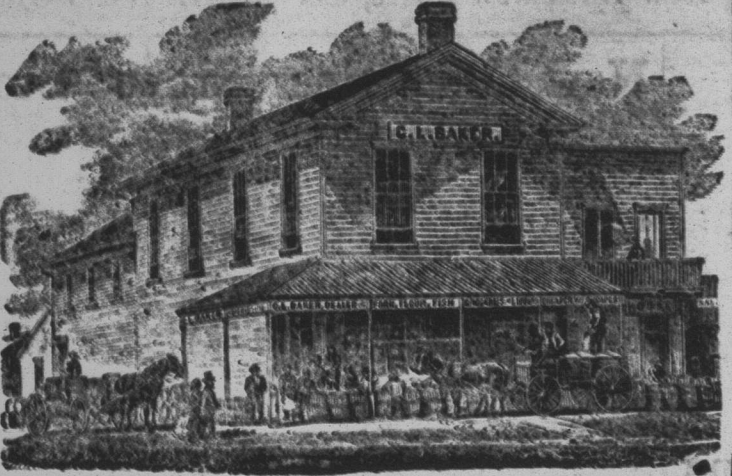

Why is a hen on a fence like a cent? Head on one side, tail on the other. Why don't hens lay at night? Then they are roosters. Why is the first chicken of a brood like the mainmast of a ship? A little forward of the main hatch. Why is a chicken just hatched like a bull's tail? Never seen before. Why should not a chicken cross the road? It would be a foul proceeding. And to conclude, a hen is a poor economist, because for every grain she gives a peck.

QURE FOR A HORSE PUTTING AT THE HALTER.—A correspondent says: "A year ago I had a four-year-old mare which had contracted the habit of pulling back the other end through the ring of the halter, and to break loose if what held her could be broken by her drawing in such a backward way. She was cured of the habit by taking a rope twelve feet long, fastening one end around her body just back of her shoulders, and passing the other end through the ring of the halter, and tying to the post. She lay back for her usual pull for a few times, when fixed in this way, but soon found she was drawing from her body, instead of her head, which she did not resist, and soon gave it up entirely. She can now be left anywhere with perfect safety, as nothing will induce her to pull back when fastened."

A TRICE.—One of the oddest April-foot-tricks recorded is that perpetrated by Habelais. He was in Marseilles and destitute of funds, but anxiously yearned to go to Paris. It was the first of April and an idea struck him. He filled two vials with brick dust and labeled them as containing poison to be administered to the royal family. He put these vials where they would be discovered. He was promptly arrested, and with great mystery. All explanation was refused him. He was at once placed en route for Paris, and conveyed there with great expedition. Carried to the palace as a traitor, he explained the trick. The vials were examined, and he was released amid general laughter.

A country schoolmaster had two pupils, to one of whom he was partial, and to the other severe. One morning it happened that these two boys were late, and called up to account for it. You must have heard the ball boys; why did you not come? "Please, sir," said the favorite, "I was dreamin' that I was going to California, and I thought the school ball was the steam-boat ball as I was goin' in." "Very well," said the master, glad of any pretext to excuse his favorite. "And now, sir, turning to the other, 'what have you to say?' "Please, sir," said the punished boy, "I—was waiting to see Tom go."

A story of James H. Beard, the artist, illustrating his quickness of wit, is told at the old Broad way House, in Cincinnati, where the better class of gentlemen went to congregate. It seems that upon occasion of a party given at the residence of a gentleman who had inherited the traditions of the Cincinnati and her countrymen as a large party of Cincinnati gentlemen were seated in the room engaged in conversation, one of the frequent visitors attracted everybody's attention by vociferating to his friends, "Come, gentlemen, let's have a Cincinnati treat." Thereupon each member stepped up to the bar, and calling for a drink, paid each his own score, and then laughed heartily at the supposed insult they had conveyed. Beard saw their intent, and turning to his companions, said, "Come, boys, let's have a Louisville treat." They obeyed, and ordered brandy glasses, when Beard ordered brandy at the bar-keeper, and said, "charge it." The laugh turned against the Louisville party.
