(To the Editor of the Warder.)

Sir. On the day that Lord Elgin was leaving Canada he made a big speech in the court house in the city of Kingston. There was a great crowd. He said 'I gave the people of Canada a responsible Covernment, I gave the people of Canada a responsible Covernment, I gave them extensive monitorpal institutions, good school laws, oxivil and religions liberty with power to desired anything. For years she lay in bed or reclined in a chair near the window, Finally she rallied and regained her wonted strength and health. Her recovery to activity was very rapid, and soon she performed her household duties as though nothing had happened. She showed no signs of mental wtakness, but attended the markets and did her own biying. She was a regular attendant at church, and for a long time continued to gentle and noiseless, but it is more power-land to the church of be perfectly well, strong and healthy. Again, about 1880, she showed symptoms of another nervous attack. She was indisposed during the winter and gradually passed into a state of lethargy. She suf-fers in no particular way. Again she lies perfectly still, sleeps and takes little nourishment. The functions of the body seem to be naturally performed. As in years gone by she hints to her attendants when anything is desired. The physician attending her has made a study of the case, as it is the only one of such a character of which he has ever heard or read about. There is no come, nothing to inthe true boundary between Ontario and the great North-west, instead of wasting the peoples' money, and fighting the Queen. Bah, the Conservatives will accure the full rights of Ontario upon a lawful and enduring basis, and the loyal electors of Ontario will not be fooled out of their votes this time with budgets of sand, chaif, fine letters and stull, and perhaps a little of the people's money hid in corners of the budgets. All in my eye; ne fooling, the Liberal-Conservative party will return the municipal rights to the people that these men took from them with arrogence and insolence that showed downright contempt for the soverign will of the people.

A simple herb found on the sunny plains of a southern clime has, under the skillful manipulation of Dr. Van Buren, and the brain. Secretion is regular, the pulse normal. She has a cool skin, a natural temperature and rests well at hight. 'There she lies," said the doctor, "as calm and placid as an infant." Iller face is without pallor. She is a remarkably neat and clean person, and unless kept in that condition intimates that semething is wrong. The doctor can only a stribute the state of lethargy to an utter prostration of the nervous system. He thinks she is conscious, but he believes that if the brain were examined the cere belinm would be found undergoing a change. Mrs. Brown is the mother of several children. Her husband is remarkably attentive and handles her like a child. It may be that she will remain in her present condition for the rest of her life, or as before she may auddenly come out of the state of lethargy.
