It was a golden day in early Septeme her, and the doors and windows of the Widow Dayre's old-fashioned house stood gling to look composed. open to admit the soft, balmy air, fragrant with the old-fashioned flowers in the quaint beds of the front yard.

Great lilaes shook their round, glossy leaves in the afternoon sunshine, and the tall rows of quince-bushes were laden with the ripening fruit.

In the large, cool dining-room, Mrs. Dayre and her youngest daughter, Sadie, were busy shining the golden pippins esaily for drying. A young man came up the shady, pleasant path, and standing in the doorway, bowed low to Sadie, craving the privilege of resting for awhile within their pleasant room. Said he :=

by trying to pose as such. The Golden Youth of New York.

New York is in a bad way about the decadence of its aristocracy. One journal plaintively wants to know what is to become of it when the rising generation handle the shekels of their fathers. Recently, it says, reference was made to the case of young Phelps, who inherited $500,000, but who died in solutary misery $500,000, but who died in solutary misery at midnight, having fallen on the sidewalk while drunk. The police when picking up the corpse supposed it to be that of some loafer, and great was the surprise when it was learned that the dead man belonged to Fifth avenue. Another and different type of the rich man's son is found in August Belmont, jr., who has just been arrested for assault and battery. One of his horses ran over a boy, whose father demanded payment of the doctor's bill. The "fast man," however, considered this impertinent and replied by a blow. He is now under arrest, and we shall see who is the stronger, the law of the land or Belmont, jr. Gebhard is another type of the rich young man—his forte being attendance upon Mrs. Langtry. He has been very quiet since young Sanford slapped him, and neither fought a duel nor appealed to the law. Another fast man who has come into notice recently is Isaac Newton, of the century club, who has been exposed as a dead beat, his method being to live at the club's expense and pay nothing. Another club man was recently detected stealing from other members, and it was found that he had been in this habit for a long time, thus keeping himself in pocket money. One may find in fact as much meanness, drunk-
