The inmates apprised of the danger by a huge fissure that opened in the wall before the tumble took place made their escape, but all the furniture and other con but all the furniture and other contents were ruined. The wall of J. Halpin's carriage shop and dwelling, next adjoining, also went down. The team of horses gave up the idea of longer remaining on this troublous scene, and that misfortune set in upon him all in a heap. The poor fellow, however, did not eay why he did not go to work, like many others similarly situated, and earn enough to buy him another team of horses and other. him another team of horses and otherwise retrieve his worldly condition. He was undoubtedly poor and needy, as the chief found when on searching, him, he extracted $100 from his pockets.
