Mr. G. P. McCall, an old Medonte teacher, now editor of an Oregon paper, makes the following sensible remarks:—The influence of school teachers is something it would be difficult to estimate. All must admit that it is great. In moulding the plastic mind of youth they are important factors. Their position is a most responsible one, and entitled to no little consideration. In spite of this, teachers frequently complain that the profession does not receive its due share of respect. This complaint is probably well-founded; but perhaps teachers themselves are somewhat to blame for the estimate placed on the profession. The teacher who truly respects his profession will command the respect of the people. This he cannot do by assuming lofty airs or making lofty pretensions, but by making himself master of his profession, by devoting his energies to it, by becoming imbued with its spirit and by realizing its responsibility. The teacher whose actions speak and whose heart feels that upon him, in some measure, depends the duty to mould the heart, develop the mind and form the character of future citizens, will have little reason to feel that the profession is not respected. Such a spirit is sure to spread and make itself felt by all who come in contact with it. In every avocation, the man who acts upon high principles and demonstrates that he thoroughly understands and values his business, will invariably command the respect of all whose good opinion is worth possessing. The teacher is no exception to the general rule. Teaching cannot be made respectable by legislation, but the profession can make it so. Not only can they command respect, but by showing that they possess noble principles and love their work for its own sake, they can command an influence in the community that cannot fail to be appreciated and recognized for good.

the profession is not respected the profession is largely to blame.

A contemporary speaks of advertising as a fine art, which is not improved by the commercial public as far as it might be. To say that one sells "the best and the cheapest" is one way, but it is not novel, and is often open to suspicion. Then there is almost as much art in the displaying of an advertisement when it is thought out and written correctly and effectively. Many excellent ones are rendered of but little use on account of the poor form and display given them. Advertisements are like men, those with anything in them work to the front, and the weaklings go to the wall, though it not unfrequently happens that a good internally as well as externally. Let us see a man's advertisement and we will tell you what manner of man he is. Study this art, it is the highest and the most important part of every business.

There was nearly a serious riot in Young street station, Montreal, one night last week. As one of the men was returning from his bus he noticed a man leaning up against a window, and, after some manoeuvring, he took him in charge, and discovered that he had been badly taken in by a man of straw. The station was not far away, so, taking the figure by the back of the neck, the constable dragged it in and threw it down on its face before the sergeant's desk. The sergeant who was on duty protested, and ordered the constable to desist, but the constable said he did not care if he killed the man, and proved his words true by kicking the figure in a terrible manner. Then the sergeant rushed out to protect the disobedient constable, but after he had turned the body used man over on his back, and caught a glimpse of the postboard face, he did not want to do anything but kick the prisoner, and go back to his den.

Harris & Oldham, Youngs street, was relieved of $13 in cash, a check for $22, and a silver watch and gold chain, besides being beaten and clubbed in a most brutal manner. Houseman, who lives on Bathurst street, had just turned into St. Patrick from Denison avenue, when he was grabbed and thrown to the ground by two men while a third threw a coat over his head to muffle his cries. He struggled with all his strength and being a powerful man, got on to his feet several times, but he was finally deprived of his senses by receiving a blow on the head with a piece of board. When he became conscious it was nearly midnight, and he could find no trace of the thieves.

A little war is going on among the railways. When rogues fall out, the public get their due. The general passenger rate is three cents a mile and many of the lines have now reduced the rate to one cent a mile, and this is much too high. Three cents a mile is a monstrous imposition, and deters the public from travelling. There has to be a revolution in railway rates sooner or later, and the railway that first adopts some such system as works so advantageously with the street cars will make a fortune for itself and give a boon to the people. Twenty-five cents for every fifty or less than fifty miles is something after the style of thing that will have to be done. A bushel of wheat weighing sixty pounds is being carried from Chicago to New York for seven cents. Putting the average man at 150 lbs. the fare at this rate would be 17 1/2c. This fare is more like seventeen dollars than seventeen cents.

Save the Independent: It will amply repay any person interested in the prosperity of the back country to make a visit to Irondele, the seat of the mining operations of Messrs. Perry and Mills. The works there are of great magnitude, and the buildings form a small town. A very moderate outlay will complete all the works, including the smelting furnace, and though the low price of iron renders it undesirable to press on the work with any rapidity, the process of construction is steadily going forward and by the time the price of iron goes up it will be completed. Free trade between Canada and the States would at once lead to the works being put in operation, for the States would be an excellent market for the iron.

A short time since a gentleman from England, a member of the association of mining engineers, visited Irondele, and expressed himself in high terms of the prospects of the undertaking. He considered the ore to be excellent, the works to be well laid out, and the furnace to be admirably located and built. His report has been circulated in the United States in mining circles, and has caused considerable attention to be turned towards Canada. It is to be hoped that the circumstances may shortly be favourable to the undertaking of Messrs Perry and Mills, as the successful operation of the Irondele smelting furnace would do more to promote the prosperity of the back country than any other event which could possibly happen.
