That direct assistance may safely and premptly be given to the first class all will admit. They deserve the sympathy and assistance of the community to whose progress and welfare they have been contributing. But how to deal with the second class is the next problem which charity and philanthropy has to solve. The real question here is not how can we provide a living for this class most cheaply, but how can we make them respectable, self-supporting, independent men and women. In order to do this we think that: 1, direct assistance in money must not be given, for in nincoses out of ten it is sure to be missepent or to deepen the spirit of dependence and pauperism. 2, By providing work and offering good payment an industrious spirit may be gradually inculented. 3, By receiving their surplus earnings during the summer and giving liberal intenset on all deposits they may be led to see the advantage of aconomy
