erhough all the paths of Palestine, And wide across the stormy sea, My cherished rose of Jericho I brought to home and thee.

"And now the secret of my soul I to the wisard rose have told, And if to morrow's light shall see Its dusty scroll unrolled,

"It life and bloom and odor come Again as from a grave set free, The rose of Jericha will fell That secret wish to thee."

The morning beams; the lady stens, Expectant, to her garden bower; Behold, the withered stem upholds A rare, mysterious flower!

A subtle ofor steals abroad; The petals gleam with golden haes It is as if the wanderer's heart Had spencel to her view.
