higher than in other countries. Would to consider the advisability of legislating to reduce the present excessive rates. The cause of deficiency in profit evidently lies in the management

Sir Richard Cartwright attacked the finance minister's speech in his usual style. But he failed to make a single very bright side of anything. His hold is of course the gloomy side. He reminds us of a story: Once a long, lank, lazy Yankee lounged into a Connecticut country store, sat down on a box of soap and after drawling out a "H' d' ye" to the genial storekeeper, heaved a sigh and muttered, "Ah, yes, Benjamin Franklin's gone -gone-poor Ben. Franklin's gone!" A pause followed. Then he broke out, "And George Washington's gone too-too-oo; poor George-he's gone too." Another pause. The stranger went through the fathers of the republic, finally coming to "Abraham Lincoln's gone too-too; poor Abrapose some day I'll be gone too-boowere proved hollow in the law courts, father is in jail for beating his mother; as due INDIRECTLY, by giving rise to be that chap was Sir Richard Cartwright. At all events he was no worse a pessimist Unfortunately for Sir Richard's figures and gloomy forebodings, people know such men as he have always lived, and in the present instance they know that compared with other lands Canada is most prosperous. Her debt is nearly all for legitimate public works, not for nonsensical expenditure. The people know all this and refuse to oust a good gleon, pessimism and corruption. It must be another cry than that that hidden by any side winds. They "jigs" will be tolerated on the general dering their muskets so as to be more familiar with them when the loyal Canadians make their onslaught next election day.
