to wear out or give it a dilapidated appearance, and that when once broken, however good the other parts of the shoe may be, it is impossible to repair them satisfactorily. These difficulties will be obvioused by using "Valiant's Patent Button-Fly" which consists of a single piece of material, as Fig. 1, of MUCH GREATER STRENGTH than any two thicknesses of materials ordinarily used on the best and strengest shoe, out of which the button-holes are cut, and by way of finish and ornament an impression of stitching is solded.

This piece is inserted in the upper, as in Fig. 2, in such a manner as to add visity to the appearance of the boot. They claim for this improvement the following advantages over any other kind of buston-hole, which, boot. They claim for this improvement the following advantages over any other kind of button-hole, which, having subjected it to the strongest possible tests, they are confident will be subjected when in general use.

Strength and Durabierty.—A comparative test of the strength of that there is no subject has resulted in showing that "Valiant's Patent" will stand a proportion of respect that there is no such that the most excessive strain possible in the wear of shoes will never succeed in his sing the hole. Most we, the button five is naturally ally strong, and has none of those artificial supports so common in button delta improvements, which are apt. under the most favorable circumstances, to ultimately assist in detracting from the appearance of the book

There is a general impression prevalent to the effect that stitching around is a means of state a ling the button hole, whereas this is merely done for the purpose of unusing the Two Materials out of we say the button hole is cut, the punctures made by the needle used in stitching tending, on the contrary, to so ken it, "Valiant's Patent Button Fly" being made of ONE MATERIAL only, stitching is dispensed with, so that there is no possibility of frayed edges and loose threads to give the shoe an untily appearance.

The button-fly is made same thickness at the edge as the ordinary worked holes, and graduated to where it joins the upper, thus rendering it sufficiently pliable, whilst at the same time avoiding the possibility of anything clumsy in the appearance of the inserted fly. It does away with those ugly wrinkles which with wear will occur across the instep on all other shoes made to button. It is as easy to button as the ordinary worked button hole, whilst the closeness of the hole after being buttoned is much neater. The new principle here introduced, of Inserting the button-fly into the upper, admits of a variety of ornamental designs on the shoe which are impossible with any other kind of button hole. The scallons and button holes are uniform in appearance, giving a symmetrical value to the shoe heretofore unattainable. In consequence of the superior strength of this button fly, a better fit can be secured without risk of injury to the hole. Having, as better said, dispensed with the necessity for working the holes, they are enabled to produce this button fly, with its additional advantages of wear and appearance, at same price as the regular worked button hole.

Ladies' shoes, having "Valiant's Patent Button-Fly" attached, can be obtained only from
