the two Houses of the Forty-Ninth Congress will meetend open in the usual way for the short busy session. The rush of Congressmen to the city, and of the crowd that always follows them, began yesterday, and will continue for the next mouth. The indications are that there will be pretty full representation of both Senators and Congressmen on next Monday, when the gavels full simultaneously in both ends of the Capital.

The question which excites the most aftention in the minds of the members who are coming in, is whether anything can or will be done with the tariff this winter. The high protectionists are bound that there shall be no reduction of purely protective duties, if it can be prevented. Thereform leaders are as anxious that some deference shall be paid to the promises of the party to which the majority belong. One of the things which the President is credited with anying in tregard to the tariff is that it should be arranged with reterence to economic inc affected with reference to economic in-ferenced with reference to economic in-ference instead of political conditions, that as a party issue it is distracting, and as experience for several long and fruitless years has shown, leads to no practical results, nor even points out practical
