PRIDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1007.

her composed by Miss Prudence Jane hey, is memory of her uncle, Wil-English, who died January 16th,

Our dearest friend, whom we leved,
Has been called away,
To a brighter home in heaven,
Above with Jesus forever to be.

He gave himself to Christ in youth, And all his journey through, He tried to serve the God he leved, Though oft in weakness, too.

And when his journey's end drew near,
He was in no alarm,
For he often said the God he loved
Would keep him safe from harm,

When his children gathered round.
His bed, his last advice to hear,
He pointed to the Lamb of God,
And told them He was near. He said the grave no victory had,
And death it had no sting,
But Jesus had come to call him home,
It is praises there to sing.

And when at last the death stroke came, So swift, so sure, so true, The hearts that loved him so dear Were almost broken, too.

Then Josus called his servant home, And plated a comm upon his brows lint O! their hearts are lonely, For that dear father, now,

We laid his body in the grave,
His soul has gone to heaven;
We should bless the Lord who taketh,
And praise for what comforts given.

O may his children be prepared, When they are called to go, To meet their dear father Upon the eternal shore.

And when we are gathered home,
And have crossed the chilly flood,
We'll unite in praising Jesus,
Who washed us in His blood.

The country has grown so great, its interests have become so complex, that the limited legislative lerm, appointed by the founders, has become too brief. Of course it will be urged by some senser and original people that Congress does more harm then good, and that the soone it adjourne the better; but this tealt is always shallow and instance, and those best acquainted with legislative history of the country know that an' jecte of great national pith and moment have enfiered most from neglect or hasty legislation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18, 1887. Congress has accomplished very little during the week in the way of important national legislation.
The people of Washington are well satisfied with what has been done, however, inasmuch as considerable progress was made with local affairs in which they are much interested. Washington is the "protege" of Congress. The district of Columbia is governed entirely by Congress, is dependent and compelled.
