CRIDAY, AUGUST 19, 1887.

ENDEPTRITENESS,

It is an easy matter for one finding fault with another, or with a party, to indules in generalities, or ind statements The chances are that unless specific objects are brought forward there is very little in the opposition. We regret exceedingly to Let a people once get into the habit of captious fault-finding, not honest criticism, and farewell to their nobility of spirit. Every man, and every government, makes mistakes; some perpetrate blunders and even crimes. But petulancy and peevishness never made a man or a nation. Anyone can be a simple fault-finder. We hope the Mail will give it up.
