"At last!" I heard her mutter, as we all followed Mrs. Carrington swiftly up the ataircase.

At the closed door she paused for a moment, and then opened it wide and walked straight up to the bed where he lay in the awful rigidity of death. The chill of the room, the white draperies, and, above all, the still outline under the sheet, all told their own tale. I saw siby! Graham's proud face grow pale with sudden emotion, but the eyes of the smitten wife were shining brightly.

"Here he is," she said, in clear, unfaltering tones, "beyond your power—you cannot harm him now!"—and without a word the new-comers went away one by one.

I lingered for a moment; but Mrs. Carrington, standing beside her dead husband, waved her hand for me to go away

"Leave him with me,"
So I went away softly, and saw Sibyl Graham going down the garden-path slowly, with bowed head. At the gate she turned and gave one long look up at the window, and her face was as white as that of the dead man np-stairs.

Four John Carrington was buried, and Mrs. Carrington seemed so homeless and miserable that one day I said to her, when she spoke of going away—

There is a little difficulty between the city and the Clavernment respecting the rent on a portion of the canal reserve, which was leased by the city in 1873 for a period of twenty-one years at $300 a year. At that time the city was putting in its waterworks system, and the land was held for piling pipes, etc., and the property was used and rent paid for it until 1859, but since then no rent has been paid, and the Government is now suing for eight years rent, some $2100. With reference to the rumor that Mr. Blake intends entering the Imperial Parliament as representative of an Irish constituency, a prominent Liberal politician at Ottawa in conversa-tion yesterday stated that it had been known in a quiet way to the leaders of the party for some time past that such was his intention. My informant stated that both Mr. Gladstone and Earl Rosebery were very greatly im-pressed by Mr. Blake's course on the Home Rule question, and were of the opinion that his presence in the Imperial House would add strength to the Liberal party on the Home Rule question, as well as on matters relating to the colonies, and ospecially to Canada. With this view they had been in communication with Mr. Blake, and prospective seat in the Cabinet on the return with the quession of Sunday observance. of the Liberals to office.
