FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1888.

A Summer Idyl.

the hush of night still lingered In the rosy light of more; Scarce sound, save rustling breezes 'Mong the silken tasseled corn;

Or skylark's soft, low twitter, Ere he fully waked, to fling Such showers of sweetest music, That e'en saddened heart must sing.

The dew besprinkled col-webs,
Like glimmering diamonds, lay
Upon wild, tangled rushes;
Or jewelled the blossomed spray.

Sure fairy elves are weaving
Mystic spells through moonlight night,
"" could there be such beauty
"awdrops light? In the pearly we.

Alone the siezag feaces

The little chipmonks flow, Scattering wild rose petala That above the railings grew;

Shaking from its honeyed cells.
The perfumed breath of clover;
Flying with reluctant step.
From Rob, sweet Bessie's lover.

For up from daisied meadow Marches Robbis with the kine-Norsh, the meek eyed Brownie, And Snewball, and Columbine;

Whistling a merry refrain: "Is aught in this world so fair, As Bessie my blue-eyed lassie, With her wealth of golden hair?"

And from the distant termhouse Comes Bessie the milking maid, Knotting her kerchief shyly; Is she of Robbin afraid? But Robbie, -the brave, bold Robbie,

Without ever a word to say, Stands holding the cows for Bessie, And looking the other way.

Till "Hess, let me carry the pail"
He pleads with such gentle grace,
That "Ay, and for eye, I will"
She cries, with a smiling face.

The rosy light has vanished,
But far up in heaven's own blue,
The skylark sings in gladsome strains,
An old, old story, ever new.
